Involuntary Deportees

With the pending deportation of a large number of Japanese aliens, many of whom find themselves "stateless persons" through no fault of their own, there has arisen a large amount of confusion and doubt not only in the minds of the general public but among these potential deportees themselves regarding their present status.

ing their present status." As jointed out by the New York Times in a special dispatch on May 29, many of these Japanese "served within the inner com-partments of military intelligence here and alread." Many of them have noss who serv-ed in the U. S. Array. In many instances minor children, American citiens, will ac-company their alsen parents to Japan. The harrh departation orders, therefore, affect not only Japanese aliens but also American children. children

The deporters include hundreds of treaty trader merchants, who were legally in this country until the abrogation of trade treaties in 1940 denied them their trade status. In a somewhat comparable situation are students, journalists and ministers. Many of these persons have since their entry into this country married and raised families. The American married citizen children of these marriages, who are of minor age will not be forced to go to Ja-jan, but will naturally accompany their par-

The present Congress has been asked to pass a bill, now known as H. R. 5454, which was introduced by Rep. Hérman P. Eberhar-ter of Pennayivania. It would delete the phrase "if not racially inadmissible or ineli-gible to naturalization in the United States" from subdivision 2, subsection c of section 13 of the Immigration Act of Feb. 5, 1917.

The bill, in effect, would give the at-torney general the right to stay deportation in hardship cases involving persons of Japanese ancestry. It would not automatically stay deportation, but would give the attorney general the right to act.

This bill is at present in the House of mittee on immigration and naturalization.

However, deportation orders now pending will not be stayed pending action upon this ЪШ

There are, at the present time, only two ways in which to postpone deportation procoolings, but both require immediate action

One method is through a test case brought in behalf of the individual subject to deportation. In these cases the government has been following a policy halting action until the outcome of the case has been decid-ed. These test cases do not, however, in any way affect other persons who are in a like situation. Though they are generally con-strued as "test cases," they apply only to the persons directly appealing to the courts. The second method by which deportation has been halted is through a private bill entered in an individual's behalf by a congre 8 ame thirty such bills have been entered. Congressmen cannot accept full responsi-bility in such cases, however, unless the individuals concerned are bonafide hardship cases with good and sufficient reason for their cases with goos ann sufficient reason for their present situation. The case of the treaty trader, certainly, who lost his legal status through the abrogation of trade treaties be-tween the United States and Japan is worthy such support.

of such support. It has recently been brought to the atten-tion of the JACL that a number of persons ordered to be deported are, through fear or shame, reluctant to fight their deportation

All persons who face involuntary deporta-

Linn to Japan should act immediately to stay such proceedings. It must be remembered that the outcome of other test cases, though they resemble their own, will have no bear-ing upon their own future disposition.

Unity in Hawaii

Hawaii's remarkable record of loyalty, unity and military support during the war just ended has been its best recommendation In its present campaign for statehood. That unity, however, did not develop overnight, though it must be considered that its long history of interracial activity and hasmony laid a strong foundation in minimizing suspicion and eliminating distrust during the WAT

In a report by Robert Shivers of the FBI to the the House sub-committee on statehood has been revealed that action for interna cial unity in Hawaii started long before the actual crisis arose on December 7, 1941.

actual crisis arose on December 7, 1941. A committee for internatial unity in Ha-wall began in December, 1940, a year before Pearl Harbox, It was called up by an Ameri-can of Chinese ancestry, and representatives of most of the racial groups in Hawaii were present. The group met to consider ways to combat a group met to consider ways to present. The group met to consider ways to comhat a growing resentioner against per-sons of Japanese ancestry which resulted from the aggression of Japan in the Pa-cific area. Eupdamentally, however, this group acted to preserve Hawavin's "traditional pattern of race relationships throws for well," as Shirmer reported, "the a way be-tween Japan and the United States would place a severe strain on the racial harmony that was part of Hawaii."

Some of the aims of this committee, which functioned so well during the war, might be justed as a pattern for other groups to

"Qvercome fear-fear on the part of the nationals of those countries with which we mixto become involved in a war that they will be mistrasted and persecuted, and fear on the particular alters might actively assist these particular alters might actively assist our enemies

Develop a strong sense of pers consibility, to do everything possible to make Hawali and the entire nation strong milltarily and otherwise.

"Be willing to give every loyal citizen, regardless of race, a place in the scheme of national defense. No group should be denied the opportunity to do its share merely be-cause of racial considerations.

"Remember that loyalty grows only when it is given a chance to grow. It does not flourish in an atmosphere of suspicion, discrimination, and denial of opportunities practice that loyalty."

Hawaii began and ended the war with a record of unity and harmony and loyalty. Much of that record can be credited to its state of early preparation and to its adop-tion of a guide for action.

Business Restrictions

An effort was made in Portland, Ore, recently to induce the city council to reacind its present han on business licenses for aliens of Japanese ancestry. The effect of this restric-tion, adopted following the outbreak of war, Thus, adoptes following the outbreak of war, has been to deny means of fivelihoot to many of the returned, exacuses. The Portland han of basiness licenses to "enemy allena," which is still in effect, represents one of the many types of discriminatory activity which has happened the successful resettlement of re-turned exacuses. furned evacuees

During the absence of the evacuees le During the absence of the evacuese lega-lition, frankly discriminatory in the case of the anticalien fishing bill (prohibiting "in-eligible aliens" from enzyating in commercial fishing in California) or regulatory in the example of the new regulations for persons operating dysing and cleaning establishments, but have based which are productiments has been passed which now prevent many thousands of the returness from establish-ing themselves in their former trades. Similars retrictions, adopted in a time of arguer and prejudice, remain on the statute-holds of mere local
