

PRUDENTIAL DENIES DISCRIMINATION IN LONG BEACH HOME PURCHASE DEAL

(The Pacific Citizen received a letter two weeks ago, which has been replied upon receipt, concerning the Ensign Emoto loan application for her home near Long Beach. We publish both letters in this issue.—Editor.)

Correction

Editor: An article appeared in your newspaper, Pacific Citizen, on April 17 with reference to Prudential Insurance Company of America has just come to my attention. This article was absolutely incorrect so far as Prudential was concerned. We would appreciate correction published in your newspaper and sincerely hope that it will be presented in the same first-page, prominent feature-position that the original article occupied.

It was alleged in the article that the Prudential had discriminated against Ensign Atsuko Emoto, Assistant Military Personnel Officer with the United States Naval Station at Terminal Island, Long Beach, California, through denial of the right to purchase a home in a new subdivision northeast of Long Beach in a tract called Carson Park. It was further reported that "the Terminal Island Naval Station officer was informed Prudential Life Insurance Board of Directors had reconsidered and has accepted to approve the purchase by insuring her loan."

The sole interest of the Prudential in the Carson Park tract is the financing of the houses through F. H. A. insured mortgages. We have no control of the sales other than to determine that the purchaser meet the credit standards established by the F. H. A. and our Company. We do not question the racial status of our borrowers.

When Ensign Emoto's loan application was presented to our Southern California Mortgage Loan Office it was immediately approved. We knew nothing about any difficulty over the sale of the property until the above-mentioned article was brought to our attention. We have hundreds of mortgage loans on our books to people of Japanese ancestry and our experience with them has been excellent.

ISSEI WILLING TO MISS FAVORITE TV PROGRAMS FOR CITIZENSHIP STUDY

Los Angeles

Over 200 Issei are in attendance two nights a week at the Sixth Ave. School to study American citizenship. The class is under sponsorship of the Southwest Los Angeles JACL chapter with Eiji Tanabe, certified by the city schools, as instructor and assisted by Mack Hamaguchi and Dick Fujioka.

Comments the chapter monthly Southwesterly:

"Seems we Nisei have a lot to learn from our parents, for it is said they give up seeing their favorite television programs to attend classes, and when they come home, they ask their children all kinds of questions about civics—things we have forgotten a long time ago."

"Maybe we should sponsor a 'brush-up' course for Nisei so they can answer the questions the Issei ask them."

OK measure to restore crosses at Punchbowl crater

Washington

The Senate Military Committee has recommended recently passage of a measure asking Congress to direct that crosses be restored at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific in Punchbowl Crater.

In one of the briefest committee reports issued this session, the committee stated it "most sympathetically concurs (with the resolution) and recommends that this resolution do pass."

The measure is House Joint Resolution No. 32 which has already passed the house.

The issue of the restoration of the white crosses at Punchbowl has been backed by many local and national organizations.

Delegate Joseph R. Farrington last month introduced in the U. S. House of Representatives the joint resolution calling on the Secretary of the Army to restore the crosses.

NO. CALIF. REGIONAL OFFICE TO BE MAINTAINED UNTIL END OF YEAR

San Mateo

The San Francisco JACL regional office will be continued until the end of this year as delegates from 22 of the 24 chapters in the Northern California-Western Nevada district council last Sunday voted to finance the $2,400 necessary to maintain the office for the last three months of the year.

The action came after delegates at the second quarterly session of the council were reminded that the National JACL budget provided funds to operate regional offices until Sept. 30, 1953.

After that date, each district was to be responsible if they wished to maintain a regional office.

Delegates were unanimous to agree continuance of the San Francisco facilities, but decided a committee would decide methods of financing the project.

San Francisco will be the site of the next quarterly session, which coincides with the welcome banquet for National JACL headquarters.

Reports on various JACL legislative activities were given by Haruo Ishimaru, N.C. regional director, during the five-hour session in the city council chamber here.

Sab Kido, wartime National JACL president, as main speaker at the banquet in the evening gave his views on Japanese rearmament and democratic gains as he observed them during his recent trip to Japan.

Certificate of appreciation for faithful service was presented to Masuji Fujii, immediate past NCWDC chairman, during the dinner. Trophies for the "Chapter of the Year" contest were given to (1st) Placer County, (2nd) Livingston-Merced, and (3rd) Sequoia by Jeff Branscom of Washington National Life Insurance Co., who donated the prizes.

SOCIAL WELFARE COMM. UNANIMOUSLY APPROVES OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE BILL

Sacramento

Repeal of the citizenship requirement for California old age security as proposed in Assemblyman Kilpatrick's AB 2059 was given an unanimous "do pass" recommendation by the Social Welfare committee of the State Assembly this week.

It is now in the Ways & Means committee, which will meet May 28, 3 p.m., (Room 4202, State Capitol), to act on the measure.

(Haruo Ishimaru, N.C. regional director, urges JACLers to write their assemblyman to act favorably on this measure, which provide old age assistance to otherwise qualified aliens residing continuously in the United States for 25 years.)

No. Calif. I & N office lauded for group procedure

San Francisco

Mike Masaoka, Washington JACL representative, and Haruo Ishimaru, Northern California regional director, met last week with the top officials of the Northern California District Office of the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, Bruce G. Barber, district director, and Harold J. Hart, chief of the Nationality and Status section.

Masaoka had high praises for the local Immigration and Naturalization Office for its expeditious group handling of naturalization procedures for Issei in this area. "Northern California is far ahead of the rest of the country, thanks to the interest and efficiency of the District Immigration and Naturalization Office," Ishimaru said.

Hart, in turn, spoke of the excellent cooperation and assistance rendered by the JACL in providing interpreters and clerical assistance in the mass processing of Issei petitioners. He remarked that he could not recall ever receiving such cooperation from any other organization.

Thus far, the District Office has given two group examinations to approximately 300 Issei graduates of naturalization classes, sponsored by the JACL under public school supervision, and has processed these Issei in groups to the point where they are ready to be sworn in soon, again as a group, as naturalized American citizens.

Japanese organizations in Hawaii seek return of property 'given' to gov't

By LAWRENCE NAKATSUKA

Honolulu

A reasonable solution for claims by Japanese organizations for the return of land and properties "given" to the government during World War II is being worked out through the Governor, the Legislature of Hawaii and Congress.

In one case, a Japanese language school is being permitted by the Territorial government to sue in court for repossession of property it needed to the government during the last war. The government, through action by the Legislature and with the Governor's approval, has waived immunity from suit and set aside the statute of limitations.

Whether the school authorities will now go to court to take advantage of this waiver remains to be seen.

The Legislature took a sweeping action, in another instance, by passing legislation asking Congress to direct the Governor and public lands commissioner to return to former owners all property conveyed by them to the Territory and the various counties by way of gift during the last war.

The Governor reluctantly approved this measure but suggested another way out, which the Legislature promptly followed. This alternative would have Congress establish a commission to investigate and settle claims filed against the government.

Valuable lands and properties are involved in the outcome of this tangled state of affairs. The background dates to the nervous period, for Hawaii's Japanese, after Pearl Harbor when they were under great suspicion as actively or potentially dangerous residents of the islands.

Japanese schools, temples and other premises were transferred to government agencies and in some cases to private parties.

Lately, some of these Japanese organizations have come up with allegations that such transfers were improperly made or influenced, and that the premises should be returned to them.

The City's Board of Supervisors spent many weeks hearing arguments on an appeal by a Shinto temple for the return of its church property.

When the Legislature convened this spring, other Japanese groups besieged lawmakers for the return of their pre-war premises.

Since the transfers were made, however, changes have occurred in the condition and improvements on these premises, the organizations or groups involved, and the ownership of such premises.

Under Hawaii's land laws, no disposition of the lands involved can be made without the consent of Congress.

Therefore, as the latest move, the Legislature has adopted a resolution requesting Congress to pass a law providing for a commission to investigate and determine allegations by the Japanese groups, and, in its judgment, "make a proper conveyance thereof."

Hawaiian statehood . . .

Last week, the legislative issue of Hawaii Statehood became a political football in the Senate when Democrats, with the support of a single Republican, decided to make it a purely partisan matter.

In a surprise move, the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee by a one-vote majority added Alaska to the House-approved Hawaiian Statehood Bill and ordered hearings on both. The voting was on a straight party line, with Nevada Republican Malone crossing over to give the Democrats the needed 8 to 7 margin.

MASAOKA

Sen. Malone is opposed to statehood for both Territories and his vote in Committee was probably the most effective method he could have used to either delay or defeat Hawaiian statehood this session.

Without regard to merits of the legislation and the accepted political fact of life that once Hawaii is admitted to Statehood it will be easier to gain that status of Alaska, the Democrats took the position that unless both Territories are given statehood neither should be accepted into the sisterhood of States.

Once again, it was the old issue of party control and party credit, for traditionally Hawaii has been Republican while Alaska, except for the last election, has tended to be Democratic.

Although acting chairman Cordon of Oregon promised to hold hearings as soon as possible, the latest Committee action has upset Majority Leader Taft's timetable which called for Senate consideration of Statehood for the deserving Territory of Hawaii after the present debate on economic controls is completed.

In this particular case, the so-called "liberal" and northern wing of the Democratic Party is playing right into hands of the Southern Dixiecrat bloc, for without question the real core of opposition to Statehood comes from the "deep" South.

Able aggressive, young Sen. Smathers of Florida who successfully floor-managed the defeat of the Alaska bill, which also resulted in killing Hawaiian Statehood, in the last Congress, has been selected by the Southern Democrats to spearhead the "fight" against the extension of status to Hawaii.

With Southerners in charge, the still unspoken threat of a "filibuster" hangs heavy over the legislation should it be scheduled for debate this year. Dixiecrat opponents of Statehood say that they haven't the remotest idea of conducting a gabfest.

But they will admit that they are going to make a "determined fight" against the Bill.

Where a "determined fight" stops and a "filibuster" starts has long been a moot question in the Senate. Democratic liberals, for example, fought the "tidelands" bill for nearly five weeks and still won't admit it was a "filibuster" to this day. Now, by common report according to Capitol Hill observers, it's the South's turn—not to "filibuster" but to talk at some length.

this familiar delaying tactic. Hot weather is coming on; the first of the "must" appropriations bills is beginning to reach the Senate floor; and leadership nerves are pretty frayed by one prolonged "talkathon."

Under ordinary circumstances, opponents would only have to make a gesture towards delay and Hawaiian Statehood would be pushed aside to make way for backlogged money bills.

This time, they face a new President who is trying to make good on his campaign pledges and an experienced and determined floor leader in Sen. Taft. So, the best strategy calls for keeping the measure bottled up in committee as long as possible and tying to it Alaska, for there are many who favor statehood for the Islands who feel that the Northern territory is not yet ready for such favored treatment.

In this way, it is planned that those who like Hawaii but dislike Alaska will vote against the bill in order to keep Alaska out.

This is an elementary but highly effective political maneuver which has succeeded too often in the past.

This time too, Southern opponents of Statehood can ill afford to start a "filibuster" they can't finish. If they waged and lost a "talkathon" against Hawaiian Statehood, their power to block civil rights legislation, which is the basis for their opposition to Statehood, would be forever in question, if not strangled.

If this happens, the Dixiecrat minority which has been the "balance of power" in Congress for the past quarter of a century will have lost its tremendous influence and prestige.

Thus, there is much at stake in the coming legislative "fight" over Hawaiian Statehood.

Though prospects are not nearly as bright as they were six weeks ago, GOP leadership both in the White House and in the Senate can and must schedule Hawaiian Statehood for consideration and passage this session.

And those Democrats who truly believe in the elimination of discrimination practices against individuals as well as political subdivisions can and must join with the Republicans in this "fight" for equality of status and opportunity.

And, if a "filibuster" is staged, round-the-clock sessions should be held and the opponents of statehood and all civil rights legislation defeated by attrition if necessary. The Republicans must demonstrate that it can break a "filibuster" otherwise its entire legislative program will remain in jeopardy.

Hawaii may yet be our 49th State in '53.

Pioneer woman first in Rio Grande valley

San Benito, Tex. Mrs. Nanyo Bessho is the first Issei of the Rio Grande valley of Texas to receive her American citizenship in a colorful ceremony at the San Benito High School auditorium May 14 in conjunction with citizenship and government classes at the school.

She was among 52 sworn in as citizens by Federal Judge James V. Allred. District Attorney Charles Bowie, addressing high school students who witnessed the proceedings, said:

"I am happy that these ceremonies are being performed in a public school because one of the most important subjects taught by our schools is citizenship."

Through efforts of her daughter, Miss Indiana Bessho, who is serving at the U.S. Immigration office at Brownsville, where they have made their home for the past 17 years, petition for naturalization was filed the day the Walter-McCarran law went into effect.

Her late husband was a naturalized American citizen by virtue of 30 years service in the U.S. Navy, where he served as chief steward under three presidential flagships before being retired with a pension.

Besides her daughter Mrs. Bessho has two sons; the oldest, Asa, a veteran of four years service in Germany, now a postal clerk at Atlanta, Ga., for 15 years; and youngest son, Louis, married to a German warbride, living in New York. Louis, an ETO veteran, has reenlisted and is now a master sergeant in Korea.

Mrs. Bessho came to the United States in 1893 as one of the Miyako dancing girls who played an engagement at the Chicago World's Fair. Before the troupe returned to Japan, she had married.

New York judge swears in Wall Street clerk

New York Thomas Torazo Nishio, 54, became an American citizen last week. U. S. immigration officials believe he is the first person born in Japan to gain citizenship in the New York area without a special act of Congress in almost 100 years.

Nishio, a clerk in Wall Street, was one of 290 persons from 32 countries to take the oath before Federal Judge Clarence G. Galston in Brooklyn. Said Nishio, "It's wonderful to become an American citizen."

Two Salt Lakers feted by Elks, DAR at rites

Salt Lake City First persons of Japanese ancestry to become naturalized Americans in the state of Utah were among 59 sworn in by Judge David T. Lewis here May 14. In his remarks, the judge noted that for the first time persons of Japanese ancestry could become citizens and said he was happy now that this was possible.

Sworn in were Masuo Namba, formerly of Portland and proprietor of Temple Pharmacy here, and Mrs. Miwako Kaneko.

Namba, who has been in the States for 47 years, was past instructor of the Issei citizenship class just concluded under auspices of the Salt Lake City JACL and Adult Education division of the Salt Lake City Schools.

Mrs. Kaneko, who came to America in 1907, is the mother of Susie Kaneko, local chapter corresponding secretary.

Namba's son Alfred H., has been in the Army for a year and is now in Korea.

It is recalled that several years ago, Namba was able to get a pharmacist's license upon the basis of his being able to file first papers with the JACL assisting him. The state of Utah requires first papers or American citizenship for such license.

The DAR here presented each new citizen with a book on the American Flag and the Elks gave each a silk American flag.

Los Angeles The Rev. Dr. John Misao Yamazaki, 68, and his wife Mary Tsune were to be called this morning to be sworn in as citizens—the first husband-wife Japanese couple to be naturalized in California.

The Episcopal general missionary of St. Mary's church came to the United States in 1904 from Nagano prefecture. They are parents of the John, vicar of St. Mary's; Dr. James N., Peter T., and Louise H.

Warbride, two Miami Issei naturalized

Miami, Fla. Two South Florida Issei and a Japanese war bride were among a record number of 442 new citizens naturalized this past week in the Federal Court here. Naturalized May 12 were: Shichinosuke Iwama, 67, of 1871 SW Seventh St., a merchant, came to the United States in October, 1907.

Mrs. Toyo Ohi 59, of 2446 NW 30th St., a widow, entered this country in September, 1914. She is the mother of three children, Louise, 35, Florence, 33, and Eddie, 31, all living in Miami Springs.

Mrs. Sachiko Medlin, a Japanese warbride of an Ashville, N. C., resident, has been in the States since April, 1948.

Joseph Savoretti, district director of immigration and naturalization, said the previous high was 432 in 1942. Forty-one nationalities were represented.

Three give allegiance in Nebraska ceremony

Scottsbluff, Neb. Three Scottsbluff county Issei residents became American citizens during naturalization proceedings in district court May 5. Judge C. G. Perry administered the oath of allegiance to Rev. Hiram Hisanori Kano, Mrs. Ivy Kano and Tatsuno Ito.

Citizenship teachers

Los Angeles With over 100 Issei responding to the East Los Angeles JACL sponsored citizenship classes at Roosevelt Evening High School on Wednesday and Friday nights Joe Wakamatsu was engaged to teach the second section.

Only 50 could be accommodated in the first section taught by Mrs. Toshiko N. Rowe.

here's what happened to Rev. Tamayose, who was born in Japan in 1881 and has lived in Hawaii for 33 years. He became a U. S. citizen, goal he has sought for over three decades. (He was naturalized with 38 other Issei Apr. 30.)

He became the first Buddhist priest to win citizenship under the new immigration and naturalization act.

He was escorted by his in-law, Rep. Toshiharu Yamaguchi (D., Kauai) to the House of Representatives where he watched the House unanimously pass a resolution, congratulating him and wish him continued "success and happiness in the days ahead."

Finally, he heard Rep. Yamaguchi inform the House that he was going to take his father-in-law and register him as a Democrat.

Rev. Tamayose arrived in Hawaii in 1920. He was made bishop of the Hawaii Buddhist Hongwanji Mission in 1940 in recognition of his long service as a Buddhist priest.

When the new immigration laws enabled him to apply for American citizenship, he filed his papers.

148 Seabrook Issei pass citizenship exam, oaths next

Seabrook One hundred and forty-eight Issei successfully completed naturalization examinations over a five-day period recently at Seabrook Farms.

The examinations climaxed three months of intensive learning at citizenship classes conducted by the Shoemaker Post No. 95 of the American Legion of Bridgeton under the sponsorship of the Seabrook JACL. Charles Nagao served as naturalization committee chairman.

Headed by Chief Examiner Thomas J. McKenney of the Philadelphia I & N office, the attaches of the office gave the tests, assisted by a large staff from the County Clerk's office and numerous individuals who served as witnesses, interpreters and typists.

The group will have the oath of allegiance administered to them by Federal Judge David L. Horowitz of Bridgeton before a special court to be held June 29 at the Farm.

Applicants filed their first papers in 1947, while the following year the Seabrook Chapter had the distinction of being the first to organize night citizenship classes in conjunction with the American Legion.

Hank, as he is known among his intimate friends, originally is from Fresno and later joined the Los Angeles newspaper, the Rafu Nichibei. He came to Japan to first work for the International Cultural Society in Tokyo before becoming a newspaperman on the old Japan Advertiser. His success in government circles came when he entered the information bureau of the Foreign Office.

His interpreting abilities were only recognized officially when he served as interpreter for the Japanese government at the International War Crimes trials, where his knowledge of both English and Japanese benefitted both defense and prosecution counsels. At every important international conference, Hank has been there.

However, his mission as a public relations officer for the Crown Prince's entourage in London is something very important for his career because he can use his journalistic knowledge to full capacity.

Prior to the Crown Prince's departure from Tokyo, Hank was in conference with His Highness.

"The Crown Prince really has his own mind and he knows what he is talking about. Through my various contacts, I was really convinced of his determined character although he says very little."

"I read of him in Mrs. Elizabeth Gray Vining's book where he wanted to give him an English name—Jimmy. He refuses his name because he is Prince. That explains everything," Hank remarked.

I recall an incident when Gen. Tojo's remarks were being interpreted by a Nisei during the war crimes trial. The Nisei interpreter said the general reported secretly to the Emperor. Tojo roared and denied what was interpreted.

Hank was there and he properly presented his remarks as "Gen. Tojo informally reported to the Emperor as was the custom." Everyone, thus, was satisfied. It was the custom in Japan to report to the Emperor informally any decision which could subsequently be made formally by the Cabinet. This informal report was known as "maiso," but the Nisei army interpreter said it meant "secretly reported." The American prosecution intended to nail Gen. Tojo for such secrecy.

Hank ironed out the situation very diplomatically — without embarrassment to anyone. Yes, Hank is all right.

Japanese rice-farmers amazed at large scale operations on Koda rice ranch

Merced

In their Japanese homeland, rice-farmers Mitsuru Fujita, Chobei Kubo and Takeshi Kumakura are big-time operators. They own farms ranging in size from four to six acres.

Imagine how they felt here recently when they visited the Koda rice ranch near Dos Palos in Merced County. The Kodas' holdings total 4,000 acres.

The vast rice lands drew adjectives such as "unbelievable" and "wonderful" from the visitors.

But the Japanese visitors could make one boast of their end of occupation, a Nisei in bad light commands reams of poor publicity. During the occupation period when there were blackmarket deals and major crimes committed by Nisei, the press refrained. There was only the whispering campaign.

Today, such a Nisei is openly denounced. But the contempt of the Japanese press for the Nisei in general goes another step.

A Nisei is not credited when he does good!

own. While the Kodas average 38 sacks of rice per acre, the visitors, on their farms in Japan, average 45 sacks.

The young Japanese farmers explain:

"We have much smaller checks and better control of water. Our farms are small, and we can watch everything more closely."

The visitors watched with interest the use of heavy machinery including airplanes on the Koda ranch.

But, they agreed, only a small motor-powered garden plow which caught their attention would be practical on their own small holdings.

The three are among a group of 43 young Japanese farmers touring the United States and studying agricultural practices under grants from the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Farming is not occupying all their time and interest.

"We also are studying the way you live and how your democratic government works," says Fujita. "We hope democracy will become the destiny of Japan."

Mutual aid society . . .

When Chicago had a mere handful of Japanese residents in the early 30s, the Japanese Mutual Aid Society was founded in 1934 to aid the sick and needy, comfort the dying and bury the dead. The society often times attended to the last rites of Japanese who were penniless, without survivors or kin.

It has provided the only mausoleum to receive the remains of persons of Japanese descent. It was built in 1937 at Montrose Cemetery. The society is today aware of the need of greater mausoleum space and has initiated last week a fund drive to construct two wings. Their goal is $5,000. (The first day's return was reported at $500.)

While the activity was primarily Issei in the beginning, in recent years it has attracted increasing Nisei support. Serving on the 40-man board are:

Last year, Mutual Aid arranged funerals for eight Issei who were without relatives. They handled 18 cremations, made hospital visits of Issei, claimed bodies of Issei who passed away on streets from the county morgue or made identifications and notified kin of deceased outside of Chicago where possible.

To help meet this need, Mid-westerners can forward their contribution to Mutual Aid Society, c/o Taisuke Takahashi, 1252 N. Clark St., Chicago 10.

Reconverted lifeboat starts long 25,000-mile Yokohama-New York trip

Yokohama
A reconverted lifeboat christened as "Chico" is on the high seas enroute from Yokohama to New York via the Mediterranean Sea. An ex-Army employee and his Japanese wife sailed from here May 16 on an adventurous 25,000-mile voyage.

William Eng, 42-year-old American of Chinese ancestry, amidst cheers of well-wishers and his wife Keiko departed on their 9½-ton yacht Chico. The former U. S. Security Forces civilian photographer hopes to complete the long journey in two years.

The Engs plan to stop at Okinawa, Formosa, Manila and Singapore before crossing the Indian ocean to the Suez Canal where they will enter the Mediterranean Sea.

Altogether they plan to visit more than 30 ports in 12 countries.

Swear-in transcript

Los Angeles
A 28-page transcript of the naturalization proceedings held Apr. 9 in the court of U. S. Judge Ernest A. Tolin has been acknowledged by the So. Calif. JACL regional office this week. On that day, the first five Issei in Southern California were made U. S. citizens.

The two-masted Chico measuring only 30 feet long and 10 feet wide, is powered by a 10-horse power auxiliary engine.

Mr. and Mrs. Eng, married six years, left their 18-month-old daughter with Mrs. Eng's mother in Japan, promising to return for the child by the time she is four.

Poison spray on berries charged

San Jose
Toshio Kitajima, Oakland Highway strawberry grower, was arraigned in Municipal Court last week on a charge of spraying his berry plants with poisonous materials without obtaining a permit.

Kitajima pleaded not guilty and asked for a jury trial. Judge Percy O'Connor set Aug. 20 for the trial. The farmer is free under $200 bail.

State Agricultural Inspector William Gorsuch accused Kitajima of using the sprays without a permit in a berry patch at Oakland Highway and Fox Ave., last Apr. 21. Gorsuch explained that permits must be obtained from the County Agricultural Commissioner before such sprays are used.

CAFE PROPRIETRESS FINDS 'LUCKY DOLLAR' WORTH FIFTY BUCKS

Seattle
A native Seattleite, Mrs. Roy M. Higashi, mother of a 5-year-old boy, says she doesn't know how to spend her prize she won for turning in her lucky dollar to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, which conducts a daily feature of announcing serial numbers of new bills worth $50.

She got the Lucky Dollar last week from a customer in the cafe she and her husband operate. Customer bought a pack of cigarettes, handed her a dollar bill and she was $50 richer.

Artist Kuniyoshi succumbs at 59, sought citizenship

New York
Yasuo Kuniyoshi, 59, one of the leading artists in the country, died May 14.

During his career the Okiyama-born painter had won many awards of the nation's top awards. His works hang in galleries across the country.

(The Pacific Citizen learned this week that Kuniyoshi was very much interested in obtaining United States citizenship. He and his wife, the former Sara Mazo, often called on Attorney Tom T. Hayashi, National First vice-president, on the progress of the Walter-McCarran bill. When it became possible for him to file his petition, he was much too sick. He was planning to submit his petition for naturalization when his death occurred.)

He came to the United States in 1906 as a boy, and worked as bellhop, fruit picker and railyard sweeper in Seattle and Spokane, Wash., to pay for his first art lessons.

In 1948, he became the first living painter in the United States to have a one-man show at the Whitney Museum of American Art. Last year, he was one of four top artists chosen to represent Americans at the 26th biennial exhibit at Venice.

He had received awards of art institutes and academies in Pennsylvania, Virginia, New York and Chicago, top honors in the American section at the Golden Gate Exposition in 1939, and first prize of the Carnegie Institute in 1944, among others.

In World War II, although listed as an enemy alien, Kuniyoshi painted posters for the U. S. Office of War Information, and delivered propaganda speeches to Japan. He wrote them in English, and they had to be translated into Japanese, because he had forgotten his native tongue.

Berkeley community picnic set June 21

Berkeley
"Welcome to the New Post-war Berkeleyans" is the theme of the community picnic here June 21 at Camp Padre in Tilden Park. The Berkeley Issei Coordinating Council is cooperating with the local JACL chapter.

The theme was motivated by the census figures which show 3,000 persons of Japanese ancestry residing here, more than double the 1940 population.

A documentary film of the history and work of the Jackson St. Community Council, a Seattle-King County Community Chest agency, will be prepared as one of this nation's answers to Russian propaganda alleging mistreatment of minorities in the United States.

Both professional actors and local people are to appear in the film, Toru Sakahara, council president, said.

Cabbages and Kings' . . .

"The time has come," the walrus said, "to talk of many things, Of ships and shoes and sealing wax, of cabbages and kings."

It all started out quite innocently. Sab Kido on one of his trips to San Francisco, said, Haruo, why don't you write a column for the Pacific Citizen about JACL activities in Northern California?" This became a repeated refrain crooned by the old JACL "genro."

Tats Kushida picked up the tune and then Harry Honda, P.C. editor, tried a little harmony. Finally last weekend Mike Masaoka made it a quartet with a bass beat, pointing out that the largest area of membership in the JACL is not represented in the Pacific Citizen.

Alas and alack, I horribly deplore male quintets, so I will start a column before National Director Mas Satow throws in his trembling treble.

I make no claims to journalistic confidence or competence, but rather in the spirit of "my head is bloody but unbowed," I shall undertake this commission.

"Cabbages and Kings" aptly describes the premonition of items that will appear in this column because here in Northern California is a very diversified area in potential subject matter.

I also hope to be able to interest guest writers to relieve the impending monotony of a solo voice from the Golden Gate.

NC-WN district . . .

Since this is about JACL activities in Northern California, it is appropriate to tell a little of the largest and most active District Council in the JACL, the Northern California-Western Nevada District Council.

Here is a sprawling cross-section of Japanese American life, encompassing persons and communities who make their living in as many diverse occupations as one can imagine, from the fishermen of Monterey to the fruit growers to the High Sierra foothills, from busy professional businessmen and women of the big cities to the patient and courageous truck farmers of the San Joaquin Valley. These are the JACLers of our little cosmos, the biggest District Council of them all.

Last year JACL membership in Northern California ran to 3,350—almost one-third of the total National membership, exceeding the next largest District Council by over 1,500 members. Included are 24 out of the 86 national chapters, from the minute but mighty chapter in Reno to the giant of the Far West, San Francisco.

Here was the birthplace of the JACL.

The pioneering spirit found in this District Council is a heritage from our valiant Issei parents and our elder Nisei statesmen.

This is to certify that . . .

One of the most thrilling experiences that was shared recently was the indescribable joy of watching Issei parents receive their certificates of graduation from citizenship classes sponsored by practically every chapter in Northern California. One wonders what these Issei are thinking as they reach for these little slips of paper, the first personal token of the fruition of a dream 50 years in the making.

Northern California is proud in having started the first citizenship class anywhere in the United States to be taught in Japanese under direction of a regular city Adult Education system, and also of the first group examination and filing in Japanese of applications. The Nisei have long profited by the heroism of their parents, and the perseverance in their twilight years is still an inspiration.

A couple of orchids should go to two attorneys in this area: Victor Abe, chairman of the Committee on Citizenship for Issei, which organized in San Francisco the first accredited citizenship class anywhere in America to be taught in Japanese; and Wayne Kanemoto of San Jose who arranged for group filing of petitions for students of similar classes sponsored by the United Citizens League of Santa Clara County.

There are other JACLers to whom tribute should be paid for keeping the wheels rolling in the background.

Northern California looks forward to a group "swearing in" of about 300 Issei as American citizens perhaps in June—another first.

Minnesota Nisei top prep 440 man, in state title bid

St. Paul, Minn.

Tom Kurihara, 17, of Monroe High is rated among the upper 1 percent of Minnesota's prep quartermilers and many coaches think he will win the state 440 title June 2 at Memorial Stadium.

Gene Aldrich, city school athletic director, believes Kurihara has a future in track. "That youngster has what it takes. I've watched him take those hurdles like a collegiate champion. You will hear from him in track at Stanford where he can run all year."

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Masuo Kurihara. Mr. Kurihara is presently employed for W. Fell Travel Agency, San Francisco.

HENRY MORI

Sometimes a fan letter really pays off.

Take the case of Tetsu Yano, an ambitious 29-year-old author of short stories from Kobe. He wanted to see America, develop his own style of writing, and introduce science-fiction articles to the Nipponese.

He wrote an open letter some months ago to Startling Stories, a standard publication, and Forrest Ackerman of Beverly Hills, director of the Los Angeles Science Fantasy Society, caught his fan mail request.

Several letters followed and last week the pair met. Yano arrived on the Kamikawa Maru to attend the west coast convention of the Science-Fiction Writers set May 30-31.

Ackerman, an agent-writer himself, will have some of his works translated into Japanese by Yano and sold to publishers in Japan. "It's just super-natural," they felt.

Mrs. Kimi Sugiyama, mother of Raymond, who was last semester's first Nisei to win the student-body presidency at Washington Junior High School in Long Beach, is mighty proud of her 16-year-old son. The sax-toting athlete, who has more blue ribbons for his den than rabbits have bunnies, won a statewide youth leadership contest sponsored by the Calif. Order of the Elks. He took the Elks Lodge 888's local competition with considerable ease. His victory in the state was unanimous. He enters the national contest.

Paul Rusch came into town last week, just long enough to say hello to his former Army buddies and tell of his Kiyosato Educational Experimental Project (KEEP) in Japan. Nisei G-2 veterans of World War II are set to keep KEEP on its feet. While Commodore Perry Post 525 of the American Legion presented him with a check, others were contemplating formation of Los Angeles Friends of KEEP.

Rusch said communism in Japan can be stemmed only if we can provide Japanese with four basic necessities of life: food, health, faith and youth. Through U.S. donations, he has built a cooperative village in 1947 for 110,000.

Delegates to the American Association on Mental Deficiency convention at the Statler last Friday learned the horrors of the atomic bomb first-hand from a Nisei pediatrician. Dr. James N. Yamazaki went to Japan three years ago under the sponsorship of the U.S. Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission to determine radiation effects on pregnant women and children. Cold figures in Nagasaki showed that of the 30 expectant mothers, seven lost their child before birth, seven infants died shortly after arrival. Of the 16 survivors, four were retarded mentally.

Task of running the 13th annual Nisei Week Festival in L'il Tokio as chairman went to Robert A. Uno, Crossroads editor. A brief rundown on the committees shows more downtown merchants will have an active hand. "The drawing board will be things Oriental to attract tourist trade," says secretary Paul Takeda of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce. The festival will be held from Aug. 15 to 23.

Vacation time is coming. It means many prefectural picnics, too. Issei look forward to it, although hardly with the vigor of the younger generation. These outings call for a big outlay in budget. One of $2,000 is easily depleted, but it's worth it to the older generation.

The Japanese Welfare Ministry reported after a new survey that there were 3,970 "occupation babies" in Japan.

File first

In Los Angeles county where the largest concentration of Issei reside today, their response to become naturalized as American citizens has been sensational. Public school authorities and government officials are favorably impressed seeing so many evening classes full. One section boasts as many as 250 students. And old-age has been no deterrent. In connection with petitions for naturalization, many Issei feel it wiser to file the Form N-400 after completion of the lectures on citizenship. It is our suggestion that forms be filed as soon as possible to enable the Naturalization Service to process them early. By the time the student ends his classwork, the investigation by the Naturalization office may have been completed. Thus, it may be possible the student will be suitably prepared for his examination. We believe this can expedite matters. And time seems so important when many of our Issei are advanced in years. By filing early, the Naturalization office will also know how many persons of Japanese ancestry are intending to take the examination. It gives them an opportunity to arrange for examiners, interpreters and so forth. The tremendous service that the chapters have been rendering in arranging classes and helping to fill the N-400 forms has been winning many friends among the Issei. In many respects, the naturalization classes can be considered one of the major projects for the JACL this year.

Vagaries

Keep Moving

Like the man who came to dinner, the National JACL established "temporary" headquarters in Salt Lake City in 1942—and stayed 11 years. At the end of this month, the National JACL is moving back to San Francisco and the occasion is being marked next week by a farewell party to be given by the Intermountain District Council in Salt Lake City. The JACL's decade and a year in the Utah capital were the most eventful in its organizational history. Here the JACL evolved its philosophy of affirmative leadership which made it a force that helped shape the destiny of the entire Japanese American population. The role of the Intermountain area chapters in assuring the survival of the JACL, at a time when the great majority of the JACL membership was in the war relocation camps, should be remembered. Assessing themselves heavily, the IDC chapters provided the funds to carry on the work of the JACL and to make possible the publication of the Pacific Citizen. In the first year after the establishment of the JACL office in Salt Lake, the IDC was the only source of financial support.

It so happened that Guyo and I and Teiko Ishida (now Mrs. Mickey Kuroiwa) were delegated by Saburo Kido, then national president of the JACL, to move the JACL's national headquarters to a city outside the Pacific Coast evacuation area. Sab and Mike Masaoka, as well as most of the JACL's other officials, were remaining behind after the end of the "voluntary" evacuation period in order to assist evacuees. We left San Francisco on the afternoon of March 28, 1942, the last day for "voluntary" evacuation. After midnight, all persons of Japanese ancestry in the evacuation zone would be "frozen," prohibited from leaving the area. Their destiny would be the barrack cities of the first American wartime concentration camps. My wife and I had returned only recently from New York City, with the vague intention of participating in whatever befell the Japanese Americans on the west coast. It was only after we had left New York that we first heard of the plans for mass evacuation. And now here we were, on the night of March 28, heading for an undetermined destination outside of California. We crossed the evacuation zone boundary at a railroad underpass on U.S. 40 outside of Auburn a few minutes before midnight deadline. I guess we had expected to see guards on duty and were surprised to find none on duty at this boundary point. All the next day — across the seemingly endless desert of Nevada—we passed cars and trucks loaded with voluntary evacuee families and their belongings. Most of them were headed for destinations in Utah and Colorado, but some were just traveling east. A Japanese face seen in a Nevada town at a lunch stop evoked a grim smile of the recognition of misery commonly shared. Near Winnemucca we were stopped by a car of sheriff's deputies who wanted to satisfy themselves that we and the other carloads of evacuees had no intention of settling down in their country. They wanted us to "keep moving."

The sun was bright and it was hot on that late spring afternoon across the great salt desert which stretches for almost a hundred miles from the Nevada line east toward Salt Lake. It was dusk when we pulled up in front of the Salt Lake JACL office on East First South street and met a harassed Jerry Katayama, the chapter's executive secretary. Jerry was swamped with requests from evacuees for information on housing, jobs and possible areas for relocation. More carloads of evacuees were arriving hourly. We decided to stay in Salt Lake, whose Mayor Ab Jenkins was one of the few public officials in the country (the late Gov. Ralph Carr of Colorado was another) who welcomed the evacuees. It was reported that Mayor Jenkins had even stopped the cars of evacuees driving through Salt Lake and invited the occupants to stay in Salt Lake City.

Office space was tight in Salt Lake, as elsewhere that year, but one day Teiko noticed an ad in the Tribune which announced that an office was available in the Beason Building. A few days later National JACL was established in a room on the fourth floor and the Beason Building became for the next decade — under Sab Kido, Mike Masaoka and National Director Masao Satow—the headquarters of the successful JACL fight on behalf of the Nisei for recognition, status and equal treatment.

DECADE AGO

Pacific Citizen, May 27, 1943 The L.A. Times reports Dies committee will charge JACL with subversive activities. Over 95 percent of evacuees in Chicago area satisfactorily employed, American Friends Service Committee reports. JACL leaders meet War Dept. and WRA officials.

From the Frying Pan . . .

For International Day

by Bill Hosokawa

Denver Mike came home from junior high the other day and reported that his class was going to have an international day. Every member was told to bring something to school that reflected the culture or handicraft of some foreign nation, and of course Mike was expected to show up with something from Japan. To his parents it was an old story. We used to trot off to grade school, many years ago, with Japanese dolls and clogs and lacquer trays and paper lanterns that our parents had stashed away. The kids and the teachers would oooh and ahhh, and when the big day was over we'd carefully take the stuff back home. But somewhere along the way all those mementoes of the old country have disappeared. For the Sansei, Japan is two full generations away, and the cultural ties have stretched thin and been broken. In an effort to accommodate Mike, we searched the house for trinkets and souvenirs that he might take along for the edification of his classmates. We found a lot of stuff, all right. A carved coconut head from the South Seas. A couple of brass trays hand-beaten in India. An ironwood head carved in Bali. Some Chinese vases. A vase and jewelry box made of marble that Uncle

Kenny sent back from Italy during the big war. A rug and some other things that we picked up on a visit to the Indian country of New Mexico. But we couldn't find anything suitable with a Japanese background. Finally we went into the garage and probed into some dusty old boxes hidden away under the rafters. Deep down, we discovered some carved wooden Japanese dolls, and a tiny plaster reproduction of the three monkeys (see, hear and speak no evil) of Nara. These we rescued and dusted off, and Mike took them to school. In a way, this loss of tangible evidences of our cultural heritage is an unfortunate thing. I think it deplorable when any tie with another culture is lost. But there's another way to look at it: Why should the Sansei be any closer to the Japanese culture than to any of the other cultures that make up the background of Americans? We have in our home samples of Norwegian brassware, Swedish glass, English cutlery, Mexican puppets, and a mess of other imported things. Why couldn't some of these articles be Mike's contribution to the international day exhibits?

Here's another side of the issue. In one issue of the evening newspaper recently, I saw an advertisement for bamboo rollup shades and another for women's sandals. Of course, the shades were Asiatic in origin, probably Japanese. So was the idea behind the sandals. These sandals were American-made, of foam rubber. But it was apparent the inspiration for the design was Japanese. A thong, like those on Japanese "zori," sprouted out of the toe end and was caught up neatly by the ankle strap. Some designer was smart enough to pick up an ancient idea and adapt it to American styles. So American women will be wearing them this summer. Likewise the bamboo shades. They've been used for centuries in the Orient. They are quaint and picturesque. That's all they were to all of us who had seen them until someone hatched the bright thought of importing them. Immediately they went over patios and sun-drenched picture windows. Perhaps we've been too close to things like "zori" and bamboo shades to see their possible adaptation to American needs, but I sure wish I had been first to think up ways to use them in the U. S. A.

Louisiana Purchase

A new commemorative was issued late last month—the pretty Louisiana Purchase stamp . . . Issei studying American history in the many naturalization classes probably can tell us it was the best real estate bargain the United States ever got—about 4 cents an acre . . . All we wanted originally was the port of New Orleans to give the western regions of the original 13 states an outlet for its commerce . . . A student of diplomatic history can probably present some complicated facets as to who really owned the land between the Mississippi and the Rockies. It wasn't all Napoleon's, he would say. Why is that this business of discrimination against minorities in the realm of housing, jobs and opportunities doesn't reach into taxes? . . . If the same degree of discrimination were applied consistently to all phases of American living (although I'm not for the idea at all), taxes could conceivably be increased 15% or so

That's based on the rough calculation that one out of every seven in the United States is non-white, non-Jewish . . . This is ridiculous notion, I must admit, but discrimination purely for selfish gains is equally so. There was a National Baby Week recently . . . Almost anyone likes babies and is willing to give them anything, including a week, but why all the celebration? . . . It certainly wasn't meant that people should have babies that week. The difficulties are obvious . . . It certainly doesn't mean we should pay special attention to babies that week for it implies we were negligent the other weeks of the year. And that isn't so . . . And if your home is blessed with a tiny tot, the baby has everyday of the years he's growing up. He's always the center of conversation and forever demanding attention . . . Do you see what I mean? Los Angeles observed Straw Hat day this past week. Do you remember the nifty one which was worn by the milkman's horse in the old days? Spring's the poet's season—Odes are popping fast—Maybe that's the reason None of them can last! —Charles Hornbeck ● TRIVIA—Sen. Morse, who holds the distinction of having talked longer than any man in the history of the Senate, may become a real menace now if he starts in talking about how he talked longer than any man in the history of the Senate . . . TV is getting into a pretty pickle. Fans missed seeing the punch that rocked Walcott last week. Couple of weeks earlier, fans saw too much in the Boston fight. Either way, the reaction didn't do boxing any good. "Nations Courage at High Level"—headline. More and more people are not afraid of dentists . . . A traffic engineer says drunken drivers cause 10 percent of traffic fatalities. Shame on the other 90 percent—all sober drivers.

Our reply

From Page 1 The Prudential is proud to include among its employees in the West and Hawaii many, many employees of Japanese ancestry. A number of these are professional life insurance underwriters who enjoy an enviable record in helping to provide family security and other life insurance needs for Westerners. Our management, both here at the Western Home Office in Los Angeles and in our 138 Field Offices throughout the West, report that they can't get enough Nisei employees. Prudential has found that they are the highest type of employee. We are also proud that thousands of persons of Japanese descent are included among Prudential policyholders. We are sure that in the interest of factual news reporting and fair play you will want to bring these facts to the attention of your readers. —EDWARD F. BAUMER Director of Public Relations The Prudential Insurance Co. of America Los Angeles.

Dear Mr. Baumer: Your letter of April 27th addressed to Mr. Harry Honda, editor of the Pacific Citizen, was referred to me for consideration. You wish correction of the article which appeared in the Pacific Citizen on April 17th which by inference stated that the Prudential Insurance Company of America had discriminated against Ensign Atsuko Emoto through the denial of the right to purchase a home in a tract called Carson Park Mutual Homes, Inc. After further investigating the facts regarding the incident called to my attention by Ensign Emoto, I have been informed that the Board of Directors of the Carson Park Mutual Homes, Inc., had rejected her application for membership in the cooperative enterprise notwithstanding the excellent condition of her credit application solely on the basis of her racial ancestry. I am informed, however, that when her loan was referred to the Prudential Insurance Company that your company approved the loan. I am happy to note from your letter that you do not question the racial status of your borrowers and that you have no control of the sales other than to determine that purchasers of privately financed homes meet the credit standards established by the Federal Housing Administration and your company. Your policy in this regard is a most commendable one, and I hope that your company will continue this practice. I feel that the article contained the word "reconsidered" which in fact should have been "considered," and I am advising the Editor of the Pacific Citizen to publish my letter of correction and clarification in order that no unfavorable reflection be made upon your excellent company with its many life underwriters and employees of Japanese ancestry. This letter, however, should not be construed in any way to detract from the fact that the Board of Directors of Carson Park Mutual Homes, Inc., displayed unjust attitude of race discrimination against a United States Naval officer in a responsible and responsible position. —FRANK F. CHUMAS JACL General Counsel Los Angeles.
