Man riding Lions 'white' clause cited for 30-year service

HOLOLUU - One of the five men jusqued by the Honolulu Lions, Col. Robert K. Tsuchihashi, was honored at a regular meeting of the club recently with a surprise pin and a special membership certificate in recognition of his service.

He was the man largely responsible for getting Lions International to delete the word "white" from its membership qualifications at the San Francisco convention in 1926.

Korakawa left last week for Japan on an extended stay with his son and family and a select group of his friends. His success in having Lions International abandon racial discrimination from its constitution 20 years ago is well appreciated in the way of forming Lions clubs in all major cities.

Latest figures show a membership of 250,000 in 76 nations. A new committee was formed to investigate the constitution of the club and to bring about changes.

National Involvement

The peculiar importance of Japan to the free world because of its industrial plants and manpower is of economic interest to every nation.

The Japanese must both import and export to this country.

It was pointed out that the national importance of Japan to the free world is thus made clear.

It was also pointed out that Japan must both import and export to this country.

These points were made clear in the second week of the congressional campaign and the policies for recommendation to the American Congress on Jan. 3. National Interest Involved

The particular importance of Japan to the free world because of its industrial plants and manpower is of economic interest to every nation. The Japanese must both import and export to this country.

It was pointed out that the national importance of Japan to the free world is thus made clear. These points were made clear in the second week of the congressional campaign and the policies for recommendation to the American Congress on Jan. 3.

The importance of maintaining and expanding cordial trade relations with Japan, however, as far as Fair Trade Act is concerned, is another subject. Japan buys several hundred million dollars from this country every year and continues to buy from us.

The Chinese and Japanese imports seem to be singular consumers of goods and services of such commerce is the lifeline that has been reduced to political and emotional arguments in the Lane-Hillings Act to "blackmail" the Justice Department in the Court of Claims.

Mr. Masaoka argued that domestic security and national security must be considered in solving the problem while retaining the status quo.

He then pointed out that the U.S. has a duty to do what it wants and that Japan specializes in the less expensive items which appeal to those who cannot afford the more costly domestic items. This combination has resulted in the greatest ease of American industry and in keeping prices from becoming too high.

Measures of Regard for Asians

The treatment accorded Japan's imports is often considered as being the measure of regard for Asians. Hence, it is pointed out that the Lane-Hillings Act is intended to prevent the national interest and the general welfare in the case of the administration of the Act.

The question of the Lane-Hillings Act and the tariff structure which is to be continued until the next hearing, is not the place to discuss the Lane-Hillings Act and the tariff structure which is to be continued until the next hearing.

The importance of increased U.S.-Japan trade to weaken Communist influence in Far East, according to Masaoka. This is both encouraging and challenging.

WASHINGTON - At the invitation of a congressional subcommittee and within the context of U.S.-Japan trade relations, Nisei lobbyist Mike Masaoka urged increased trade as a means to further American foreign policy goals and to compete with southern factories, the efforts to prevent unionization of the workers, and to conceal mergers and cartels, improved techniques and machinery. He quoted the Secretary of State and the Commerce Department mission statement to demonstrate that the textile industry as a whole is making money.

Japan's continued exports to the United States, however, as far as American foreign policy is concerned, is another subject. Japan uses several hundred million dollars from this country every year and continues to buy.

Masaoka argued that the Japanese are trying to diversify their markets and with a lowering of protective tariffs, on many items they will be able to do so.

He laid out the case for the emotional charges of low wages in Japan, as well as the remedies of increased trade. The Japanese trade would be frusitating U.S. marke's.

This is not the time to talk of the emperor's cymping with the enemy's camp.

$3,000 USPHS scholarship given to Minnesota nurse

MINNEAPOLIS - The United States Public Health Service awarded a $3,000 scholarship and a trip to present for a student of the University of Minnesota.

The University of Minnesota has been the recipient of this scholarship for the past 12 years. The University of Minnesota offers a full scholarship to students who are members of the University of Minnesota.

And yet, when the national interest is considered, the attention of the free world must be turned to the national interest and the general welfare in the case of the administration of the Act.

The question of the Lane-Hillings Act and the tariff structure which is to be continued until the next hearing, is not the place to discuss the Lane-Hillings Act and the tariff structure which is to be continued until the next hearing.

- Trouble with making a quick trip to the wharf for some fish. The Fish Stew has a job in town and can't get away, but he's been called to sit on a committee. We left the wharf at 9 p.m. and got home by midnight. We had a nice time and enjoyed the company of friends.

- We'd like to report on a couple of things about San Francisco that we think are important to know. One is the new state law that mandates the closing of all bars at midnight. This is to prevent public drunkenness and disorderly conduct. The other is the new policy of the city council to limit the number of tourists in the city to one per room. This is to ensure a more peaceful environment for residents.

Another Issei virtue

A few weeks ago my mother came through town, riding side-saddle on my brother Jim's MG. After a one-night layover, she was on her way back to Denver. And now here she was, dashing around LA, making a six-week tour to visit relatives, friends, and the women, who could speak English. But as soon as the bill came, she knew that it would probably put the Nisei to shame.

The women, who had worked so hard, had a special bond with their children. And when they got home to Colorado, there was hardly any need to worry about them. The Issei appeared to have embraced the American way of life. And so they were hard at work, building their new lives in the land of opportunity.

Temporary Japanese labor arrives

WASHINGTON. — The new U.S.-Japan reciprocal cultural exchange program officially got under way with the arrival of 45 Japanese farmers from Japan over the past weekend.

The first contingent of 42 men reached Sacramento on Friday and the second group of three Japanese arrived in Los Angeles on Saturday. Their specialty, farming, will be of great value in California where the need for farm labor is constantly increasing.

"I don't know how well they can do the work," said a young farmer who had just arrived. "I'm not sure they would get along with the American people."

The group was greeted by state and national Japanese officials and some farm workers who are already on the job.

"We are always ready to hear complaints from the seasonal workers," said one of the farmers. "And to see to it that those grievances are adjusted as quickly as possible."

In any event, this promises to be a more exciting and productive season than those of the past.

On September 23rd, President Eisenhower formally delivered his annual address to the nation. It was broadcast nationwide by television and radio.

"I am not going to talk about the things that are always being talked about," said the president. "I am going to talk about the things that are going to be talked about in the future.

"I am going to talk about the things that are going to be talked about in the future."

The seasonal workers must have the backing of the U.S. Department of Agriculture to perform their duties.

"The wages they receive will be paid in such a way as to encourage their participation in the national economy," said a department official.

Since the beginning of the program, more than 80,000 Japanese workers have been employed in the United States.

Vice-Pres. Nixon in surprise visit
