1st Amendment Decisions

WASHINGTON, D.C.—This week marked the beginning of the new Congress and the first day of the 113th Congress, which is expected to be a contentious session. The Supreme Court ruled in two cases that could have significant implications for free speech and free press.

In the first case, Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, the Court struck down a law that had required corporations and unions to disclose their political expenditures. The Court ruled that the law violated the First Amendment's free speech clause because it favored one form of political speech over another.

In the second case, Aereo Inc. v. American Broadcasting Companies, the Court ruled that Aereo, a company that allows users to watch broadcast television shows online, was not violating copyright law. The Court found that Aereo was not a public broadcaster but rather a service provider, and therefore was not subject to copyright law.

These decisions could have a significant impact on the way political speech and broadcast television are regulated.
