____ EDITORIAL OF THE PACIFIC CITIZEN ---On the Wheat Referendum

Publishing of the Dept. of Agriculture story on the forthcoming national wheat referendum in this week's Pacific Citizen is unprecedented in a journal primarily devoted to programs and activities of the JACL

While the article explains the Department's position. its publication in the PC, of course, does not mean that it reflects JACL policy on this question. Neither the PC, JACL nor its Washington office takes a position on this matter as to whether a "yes" or "no" vote is best for the Nisei wheat grower. We do take the position that PC should, from time to time, meet its role of public service by supplying information that may be of interest-in this instant to Nisei wheat growers.

This policy of public service is also pursued when in-formation is presented to those concerned with civil rights, immigration, and similar issues which have had more direct concern to the JACL membership. And since so many of our members are farmers, we feel this week's story is a legitimate service

'ONE PERSON, ONE VOTE' PHILOSOPHY

"Will the electoral college system of electing presidents be the next element of United States government to conform to the 'one person, one vote' philosophy expounded by the U.S. Supreme Court?"

This question is raised by the Congressional Quarterly in view of the sweeping Mar. 18 decision disallowing Georgia's "unit rule" whereby state and congressional candidates were required to obtain not a popular majority but only a majority of the units assigned to counties and districts. Georgia's system is like a "little electoral college". -

CQ believes the first challenges to the 174-year-old electoral college under the "one person, one vote" philosophy may appear in the fortheoming hearings before the Senate subcommittee on constitutional amendments, chaired by Estes Kefauver.

The institution of the electoral college has survived since the founding of the Republic, despite more than 100 attempts in Congress to alter or abolish it. In the elections of 1824, 1876 and 1888, the presidential candidate receiving the largest popular vote failed to win a majority of the electoral votes

After 1832, South Carolina was the only state in which electors were still chosen by the legislatures. With growth of democracy, the privilege of choosing electors was passed to the people. As we know, electors of the party receiving the highest vote are elected and by long-established custom these electors vote for their party nominee, thus giving the state's electoral votes to him, although the constitution does not require them to do so.

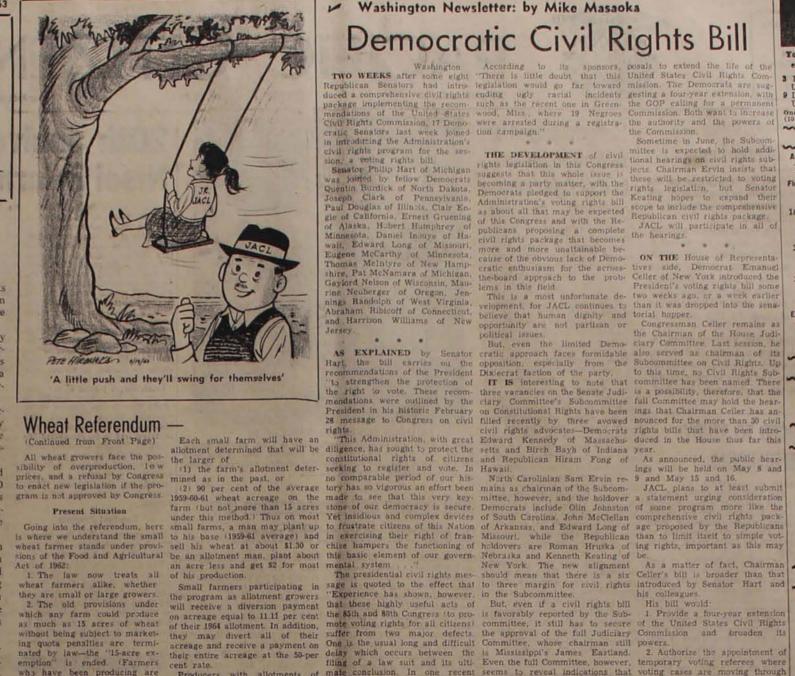

This "winner take all" custom of state casting their electoral votes as a unit rather than dividing them to reflect the actual popular vote for President and Vice President is the chief target of criticism, says the CQ. Though the Court could hardly invalidate the electoral college per se, the "one person, one vole" idea may be undermining the props of that system. The critics cite the gradual expansion. of the concept of political equality from the Declaration of Independence to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address to the amendments guaranteeing the vote to all races, direct vote for senators and women's franchise.

CQ suggests the possibility that the court might give consideration to a suit challenging the right of states to cast their presidential electoral votes as units. By citing the Georgia case, a voter might claim he is being denied "equal protection of the laws" guaranteed in the 14th Amendment when the "winner take all" system would mean his vote is actually assigned in the national vote totals to the man he opposed Hence, the legal point might be whether the provision in the original Constitution (Art. II, Sec. 1) stipulating states appointing electors "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct" was modified by the 14th Amendment.

Politicians see no advantage in changing the present system for it might cause a major shift in presidential election strategy. CQ quotes then Sen. John F. Kennedy when Congress last considered reform of the electoral college in 1956. He warned that under the reforms, the evenly divided big states would lose their influence at the expense of oneparty small states. The reform called for dividing state votes proportionately on a district system.

Dissatisfaction with this electoral system of selecting our President and Vice President has ushered various remedies. Some have suggested the electoral college be abolished, but that the part of the state in electing the President be retained. That is, the state vote could still be determined, as now, by the number of its senators and representatives in Congress and cast for the candidate who received the highest number of votes.

A more far-reaching proposal calls for direct election by the people; but few advocate this since it would tend to break up states as political units.

The law now treats all wheat farmers allke, whether they are small or large growers.

We have seen more action on reapportionment this past year than in the previous 25. More than 50 suits were started in 38 states since the Supreme Court ruled in 1962 in the Tennessee reapportionment case that held city voters deserved a better break in representation at the state legisla-

Another interesting point is made in a study published by Ebony magazine. Though Negroes constitute 17.8 pct. of the population in the 30 largest cities, there are only five Negro elected to the 88th Congress. Here, gerrymandering does its best to dilute the value of Negro votes. Yet, as recent events in Alabama and Mississippi have shown, the Negroes sustain a variety of abuses to attain their rightful privilege of merely being registered as voters.

Much still remains to be done, however, as a recent study by the National Municipal League shows that less than 30 pct. of the population is able to elect a majority of the lowe rhouse in 13 state legislatures and a majority of the upper house in 20 states. The ultimate goal of legislatureswhether state or federal-is to be responsible and responsive to the people electing them. And today, the people are primarily urban.

This is part of the great debate now developing and nolitical scientists and good-government groups agree that more hard thinking needs to be done if the "one person, one vote" concept is to be alive.

We think it's a valid cry for it would surely dispel voter apathy. And the courts are playing a catalytic role in stimulating legislation that assures "equal protection of the laws." Our system of democracy is thereby strengthened.

San Diego

APPROACH BY AIR - The nicest way to approach San Diego for the first time, it seems to me, is to fly in from Phoenix, which we did last week. The plane floats over the desotation of Arizona, across the desert-ringed Salton Sea, and finally there like an oasis is San Diego. Denver is just turning green after the winter, but San Diego's floral gardens are in full bloom. Long-time residents here say life becomes monotonous without winter, but I suspect they were saying that to be nice to an under-privileged visitor from the frozen Rockies

Actually, we spent five days in La Jolla, the watering place up the coast from San Diego, and on all five days Denver was warmer (and presumably sunnier) than San Diego.

SOUTHBOUND EXPRESS - No one seems to visit San Diego for the first time without visiting Mexico, or rather that unspeakable part of Mexico represented by Tijuana. We were no exception. We joined the mad rush, a half hour's ride, south on Highway 101, a four-lane speedway to the fleshpots that seem to be Tijuana's sole reason for existence

What impressed us the most about the visit to Mexico was the casual manner in which thousands of persons are allowed to cross and re-cross the international border. No passports, no driver's license, nothing but a simple question: "Are you an American citizen?" An affirmative answer was the magic word going either way.

In our car were five Caucasians and this reporter. One of the Caucasians was a British subject. He was required to show his alien registration card. Another was asleep on the way back into the United States. The U.S. border guard awakened him to ask where he was born. But they didn't bother to look at me twice. It would seem they get a lot of Nisel traveling back and forth.

BAMBOO GAMBLE - One afternoon at the end of the day's business we drove to the Presidio Nursery at the corner of Linda Vista and Morena boulevard, having ascertained by telephone that they stocked such things, and picked up a bamboo plant growing in a rusty one-gallon can. The help seemed somewhat dubious about my plan to transport the plant to Denver and plant it outdoors in our mile-high climate. They were sure it would freeze to death next winter. We told them that for the price-$2.50-we could afford to gamble.

The friendly lady at the cash register identified herself as Mrs. Asakawa who spoke proudly of having lived in San Diego for a half century. The Presidio Nursery, she said, was run by her son and had 20,000 square feet of space under the roof. It was a beautiful store, and I wish we could have stayed longer to get acquainted.

CHANGING TIMES - The business that took us to San Diego was a seminar for writers sponsored by the American Cancer Society at the plush La Jolla Beach and Tennis Club. The club was, and I suppose it still is, a stronghold of conservatism for obviously it takes a substantial bank account to belong. Such clubs in the past have been notably reluctant. about opening their doors to anyone but Anglo-Saxon Christians.

It may of may not be noteworthy that a large number of the scientists who spoke at the seminar were of Jewish extraction who were, of course, extended use of the club's bar, tennis courts, swimming pool and other facilities. So was the only Niei present. Which may be another sign that our times are indeed changing. There were no Negroes among either the scientists or the reporters, but if there had been one present there is no reason to believe that he would have been unwelcome
