President's Corner

Seven Hours to Be Remembered

Omaha. It was my extreme good fortune, as well as a privilege, to be on hand that historic Friday, June 19, 1964, as the roll call for the U.S. Senate on perhaps the most important piece of legislation enacted in the past 100 years.

On this memorable day, in company with our Washington Representative Mike Masaoka and Dr. Thaddeus P. Krush, my colleague and superior at the Nebraska Psychiatric Institute, we listened for seven hours to the last minute arguments and passionate pleas on both sides of the civil rights issue.

Around 7 p.m., Senator Mike Mansfield, Majority Leader, entered the Senate chambers and requested recognition of the Acting President pro tempore for 10 minutes. Senator Mansfield commented by stating that this was the first anniversary of the late President John F. Kennedy's submission of the present legislation to Congress. He further said, "President Kennedy asked for a law to provide 'reasonable and equitable means' to soothe the Nation's racial agony, 'however long it may take and however troublesome it may be.' He continued by saying in his judgment 'attainment of this moment is perhaps of even greater significance than the outcome of the vote itself, for it underscores, once again the basic premise of our Government that a people of great diversity can resolve its most profound differences under the Constitution, through the process of reason, restraint, and reciprocal understanding.'

I was quite impressed when I was elected as the first Senator from Montana that what has been done in the state on the issue of Civil Rights can and must be done throughout the Nation. The differences on this issue run deep in the Senate as exhibited by approximately 100 days of debate, as anywhere else, but no blood was shed in the Senate chambers, and blood need not be shed elsewhere.

Following Senator Mansfield's closing remarks of ten minutes, the great and distinguished Senator from Illinois, Minority Leader Everett Dirksen, made his closing remarks for a 35 minute orator and concluded by giving his reasons for being a crusader by quoting the poet John Donne: "Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind." What ever the color of our skin, we are all mankind.

Approximately ten months ago, on a bright August day, I participated in the historic March in Washington for freedom for the Redress of Grievances. I joined 200,000 Americans of all colors and creeds from every portion of the land who congregated at the Jefferson Memorial and heard in the chant of "We shall Overcome" and marched to the Lincoln Memorial to petition our Congress to recognize the rights for all citizens regardless of race, color, creed or national origin. This orderly and dignified March for equality has found fruition and this petition for the redress of grievances led to the passage of remedial legislation which I again was privileged to observe by being on hand in the Senators' section of the Senate gallery, as guest of Senator Roman Hruska of Nebraska.

What an appropriate and fitting conclusion to an active 10-year term of office as your National President.

Seabrook installation, with Matsunaga as speaker, termed 'most outstanding'

SEABROOK.—The 1964 installation of the Seabrook JACL held on 29 was labeled by most of the attending by those who were present at the banquet at the Italian-American Civic Club. Congressman Spark M. Matsunaga of Hawaii, an outstanding lawyer and leader in numerous civil and community affairs who read with great distinction in World War II in both European and Middle East Theater and Pacific Theater, was the guest speaker.

In addition to his combat duties as company commander, he was assigned to Military Intelligence while assigned as JACL National officer, he lectured to 800 different military and civilian groups in collaboration with the JACL efforts to relocate Americans of Japanese ancestry. He had very impressive message to his 1000 tributes to the role played by the JACL in the relocation of the Nisei and Sansei Americans—their efforts for community acceptance and the achievements of the American of Japanese ancestry. He spoke of the sacrifice of many both in war and in civilian life.

State Senator Robert Weber, N.J. Congressman Milton Gense, Hethelwyn Meyer, Thomas Daily, in extending greetings for the occasion, stressed the important role played by the JACL Chapter president Dr. Paul Moroi to open the program with words of welcome. Henry Kato served as toastmaster.

Karen Harris of Philadelphia, chairman of EDC, installed Charles Nagao as president for the fiscal year. The cabinet included Kiyomi Nakamura, v.p.; Fusayo Matsunaga, 2nd v.p.; Florence Schaller, rec. sec.; Gloria Otani, corr. sec.; Iren Kobayashi, treasurer; Robert Furusawa, dist. James Taniuchi and Masaki Ooki, alt. dist.; and Leta Wakai, alt. dist.

Analysis, Civil Rights Act of 1964

WASHINGTON.—Since last week the Democratic leadership was able to work out a timetable for the House in October and accept the so-called Durham-McIntire substitute civil rights bill that was passed by the Senate on June 19 after cloture had been invoked since six days earlier. The Senate substitute will become the Civil Rights Act of 1964 when it is signed into law by President Johnson, possibly on July 2.

Because its application will daily affect the lives of all Americans, and especially those of Japanese ancestry, to whom it also applies with equal force, we have secured an analysis of the Senate substitute in order that it may be recognized in full for the information of our readers.

While the Senate substitute differs from the House-passed bill in many respects, the changes do not substantially alter its effectiveness. As a matter of fact, some of the changes improve on the House measure in any event, thus the Senate substitute does not reduce the basic coverage of the House bill, although the Senate amendments put emphasis on giving extra legal authority to the civil rights division, to solve the problems of discrimination and segregation.

Nisei in Filmdom

LAST TIME we saw Dick Akas back, he was finishing up the filming of his first motion picture, an eight-minute short subject called "The Cocktail Party." Dick Akas, who is a member of the National Information Services, is a mover and shaker of the film which was completed at $2,000, a couple of thousand less than the original budget, and is slated for release in the next few theaters.

Akas, who represented the JACL in Chicago and Washington, D.C. in 1949, has been on a magazine for some time now. He has written for "The Day After Tomorrow," a weekly magazine, and has been one of the most representative of the 300,000 Nisei who are active in the magazine. Dick Akas' original story, "The Day After Tomorrow," was the script, while Akas was the producer. Director of the picture is one of the celebrated of New York's film industry, Henry King.

Akas has an Academy Award and Oscar for his "The Day After Tomorrow," a satirical film which is a comedy.

Speaking the picture is a comedy. Akas says there are some "speaking roles" in the picture. One of the performers are young actors and actresses who are making their debut in the film. Akas is inviting them to a cocktail party at a Manhattan apartment.

HERE are many Nisei, there are in various phases of film production, as producer, cameraman, script writers and the like. Akas is technically not a director, but he has been a stage director including of MGM's important picture, "The Day After Tomorrow." Akas has been the producer for many of Paramount's pictures since the 1930s, and has been a Hollywood cameraman in the early 1930s and because of his excellent camerawork in Japan.

A Japanese Chamber of Commerce has collected by the Nisei Chamber of Commerce in Japan.

ANGELLES—Eight hundred have been collected by the Nisei Chamber of Commerce in Japan. Akas is a graduate of Andrews Academy and was in major in education at Seattle University in the fall.

Princesses in Queen Colleen's court are Edna Hoshi Egayama, 18, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shichi Suyama, 4212 28th Ave. So., and Dorothy Y. Harada, 19, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kazuo Harada, 1123 17th Ave.

bodged around $10,000, helped spell the end of filmmaking from this Nisei-capitalized organization. The Nisei's interest was that of investment of capital in pictures, rather than in subject matter. As a result the few pictures made under the Nisei's banner were westerns, hot rod rumble adventures and melodramas.

PROBABLY the first and only all-Nisei picture was "Nisei Parade," a couple of thousand less than the original budget, and is slated for release in the next few theaters.

PROBABLY the most prolific of the Nisei filmmakers are Toshi Fujihira, who has been the cameraman in the subject of numerous art subjects in the last 20 years. Toshi is now one of the top professionals in the field and turns the globe on his assignments. His first picture was a non-professional effort, a short which was adapted from the subject of "The Day After Tomorrow" which was filmed in New York back in 1940 with a Nisei cast which included Toshi Fujihira.

Another busy filmmaker is Henry Uchijima who operates a filmmaking company in the industrial and educational film field in Chicago. Uchijima has made both feature and shorts.

Seizuro Shinkishi, Taji, who lives in Holland, once made a short subject on narcotics addiction called "The Viper" which won an award at a Cannes film festival.

There probably are many more Nisei active in various phases of filmmaking as there are hundreds now performing before the camera in motion pictures and in television films.

Brazilian Nisei Congressman Visits Japan

BY TAMOTSU MURAYAMA
TOKYO—Congressman Sumuro Hirata is visiting here with the Brazilian parliamentary delegation to Japan composed of some 15 members and their wives. They were received in audience by the Emperor and the Empress on June 30 as state guests.

Congressman Hirata is one of 30 Nisei congressmen in Brazil. He was born and educated in Brazil, but he came to Japan to study before the outbreak of World War II. He studied commercial law under Dr. Kikuo Tsunaka, who became the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Japan right after the war.

He stayed in Japan about 10 years until he could return to Brazil in 1931 to open up a law office. Incidentally, he passed the bar examination of Brazil before he came to Japan.

His younger brother died at Pearl Harbor at the early stage of the Pacific War.

Congressman Hirata worked for the American occupation in Fukuoka Prefecture where he made many American-born Nisei friends.

Now he has an extensive practice as legal adviser to the Japanese Consulate General in Sao Paulo as well as in other capacities.

White exodus fails to materialize when Negroes move into new neighborhood

When Negroes have moved into a new neighborhood as the result of FEPC conciliation efforts, white residents have not moved out, the California Fair Employment Practice Commission reports.

Mr. Carmen H. Warschaw, FEPC chairman, said that despite apprehensions in some quarters when the Legislature passed the Rumford Fair Housing Act, six months of experience under the law have brought not a single instance of exodus by whites when FEPC has assisted minority-group families to rent or buy dwellings denied them through discriminatory practices.

California experience in this regard has not differed from that of other states where fears of racially charged neighborhoods have turned out to be unfounded, Mrs. Warschaw said.

The FEPC received 220 complaints of alleged discrimination in housing between September 20, 1962, when the Rumford Act became effective, and May 31, 1964. Eighty-four of these were denied and 36 were still under investigation or conciliation at the end of May. Sixty percent of all completed cases resulted in corrective action after conference and conciliation.

The majority of all cases involved refusal to show property or to rent or sell to Negroes. In denied cases FEPC conciliation resulted in 26 complaints being permitted to inspect the dwellings they were initially refused. Two cases moved to the state where the landlord found that they preferred to take other accommodations.

None of the complaints were against FEPC conciliation efforts, owner-occupied homes that were privately financed. The majority involved commercial establishments or individuals in the business of housing, such as managers, agents or real estate brokers, who were concerned about the few single-family dwellings—with FHA loans or other publically assisted financing—were involved in FEPC cases through complaints filed against someone in the business.

Examples of cases settled by FEPC under the Rumford Act include these two:

A Negro man seeking to purchase a home for himself and his family made an offer and put a deposit on a house in the San Francisco Bay Area. The following day the real estate agent returned the deposit, explaining that the owner had decided to withdraw the house from the market. Believing he was being discriminated against because of his race, the prospective buyer filed a complaint with the FEPC. Investigation showed that the property was held under an FHA-insured loan. A conference with the agent revealed that he had been deceptive in his dealings with the prospective buyer and disclosed as well a pattern of inferior service to other non-whites. Following advice by FEPC, the complainant submitted a new offer which the agent forwarded to the owner. It was accepted and the Negro program applied for financing to complete the transaction.

A Negro mother, calling to inspect an apartment that had been advertised, was told the owner had decided not to rent after all. When she called again the following day she was informed that the apartment was being held for a higher rent. She filed a complaint with the FEPC. On his first telephone call, the FEPC consultant, explaining the law to the owner, advised her to accept rental of his apartments to all qualified applicants. The complainant was offered the apartment and moved into it with her child shortly thereafter.

Hakuji gakuen grad returns after 35 yrs. to address commencement in Japanese

G.S. staff. Anderson thinks "it is extremely important that all of us learn at least one foreign language as it is only through the language that we can understand the people." He also supports the state program of teaching foreign languages from the elementary years. "It isn't important which foreign language you learn as long as you learn one," he adds.

He began talking with Nisei schoolmates at Lowell and graduated to enroll at Kinross Gakuen. Last June 13, it marked the 35th year since he was graduated from the school and had returned as guest speaker at the commencement, retelling in Nihongo how his Japanese affected his life.

When he enrolled at Kinross, he was in the kindergarten class with 10-year-old youngsters. It was long before he had finished 23 toshon (reading books), which gave him a knowledge of 2,000 Kanji. He boosted this to 5,000 by reading the venacular newspapers.

After graduating from high school in 1929 came odd jobs and graduation from Stanford in 1932. Finishing Hastings College of Law in San Francisco—where he was admitted to the state bar in 1935. When World War II broke, he joined the military intelligence. As Camp Savage first, he discovered he knew more Japanese than the instructors. He was applied for transfer overseas and was assigned to 16th Infantry's intelligence staff. He later became a member of Gen. MacArthur's staff.

The award evolved in 1944 to give public recognition to the life insurance producer who does a quality sales job, is the highest award given by the industry.

Statistics of racial marriages in Hawaii show wider age span in mixed partners

HONOLULUI—The bigger the age span in which the bride and groom are joined, the bigger the chance it is an interracial marriage, according to Hawaii marriage statistics.

Seventy percent of the marriages in which the bridegroom is 25 years or more older than the bride are interracial.

This compares with the State average of 49 percent for all marriages in 1962. Of 126 couples of the same age, the interracial marriage rate is 34.7 percent. The percentage declines as the age spread between bride and groom grows.

The statistics are contained in a paper prepared by Robert C. Schmidt, of the Department of Planning and Economic Development, for the annual meeting of the Population Association of America in San Francisco.

He studied in detail the marriage statistics of a two-year period, between January 1, 1961, through December 31, 1962.

"Interracial marriage rates in Hawaii have been increasing since data were first compiled more than a half century ago," Schmidt said.

"The rate for the four-year period ended in mid-1946 was 11.5 percent, and for the year ending in 1962 it rose to 20.3 percent for 1920-1920, 22.7 percent for 1930-

1940, 28.4 percent for 1940-1949, and 22.1 percent for 1950-1959. The rate for 1962, the most recent year so far reported, was 21.7 percent, an all-time high.

During the two-year period reported for detailed analysis, 3,986 marriages, or 31 percent of the total, were interracial.

Among bridegrooms, the rate was lowest for the Japanese (14.9 percent), and Caucasian (17.4 percent) and highest among the Hawaiians (24.9 percent) and Negroes (23.4 percent) and Japanese (23.3 percent) it was highest for Hawaiians (24.9 percent) and Koreans (23.6 percent).

Common Partners
Schmidt said the most common interracial pairings were Caucasian men and part-Hawaiian women (183 marriages), part-Hawaiian men and Caucasian women (309), Filipino men and part-Hawaiian women (266) and Japanese men (246) and Caucasian men and Filipino women (226).

There is a significant difference in interracial marriages and occupations. Twenty-four per cent of the men in the professional and technical category were involved in interracial marriages, while 21 per cent of the farm laborers and 19 per cent were in interracial marriages. Thirty-three per cent of the men in the military services were in interracial marriages, while 12.8 per cent of the women in the military services married outside their racial group.

Schmidt said that these three hypotheses advanced to explain the differences in interracial marriage and occupations: 1—Higher income individuals may live in a neighborhood with a low degree of racial mixture and thus not meet members of other ethnic groups as readily as those living in middle and lower income neighborhoods.

2—High status families may be less tolerant toward interracial marriage than low-status families.

3—"A few employers and social groups may still discriminate against interracial marriages."

2-Year Period
The statistics are contained in a paper prepared by Robert C. Schmidt, of the Department of Planning and Economic Development, for the annual meeting of the Population Association of America in San Francisco.

He studied in detail the marriage statistics of a two-year period, between January 1, 1961, through December 31, 1962.

"Interracial marriage rates in Hawaii have been increasing since data were first compiled more than a half century ago," Schmidt said.
