

Employment Opportunity

Washington
As order was being rendered in the Watts area of Los Angeles after a week of tragic and costly riots, here in Washington last Friday, the 20th, a group of Negroes spoke eloquent truths regarding the Negro's position in the United States. They spoke of the Negro's position in the United States, and they spoke of the Negro's position in the United States.

The Chief Executive who has probably done more to advance the rights of the Negro than any other American, and especially the Negroes, declared that "with rights and responsibilities there must be responsibility for their own actions. We must not, and we must not, in one breath demand laws to protect the rights of all our citizens, and then turn our backs on the law and the law enforcement agencies to be broken that protect the safety of our citizens. There just must never come the hour in this regard when our citizen, whoever it is, can ever ignore the law or break the law with impunity."

"And unless we are successful in the two-fold endeavor of to promote equal opportunity and equal responsibility, we may as well cease to exist without discrimination by the force of hate and bigotry."

So spoke the President of the United States, to a group of Negroes, to a group of public and private organizations, including business, called to a special Washington conference to implement Title VII, the equal employment opportunity act, of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

"JACI's Washington Representative was among those who attended the two-day conference, whose chairman was Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., whose father established the National Urban League's Practices Committee almost a quarter of a century earlier."

"The keynote of the opening session was Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey who as a United States Senator, and as a member of the President's Council on Post-World War II Congressional Policies for Civil Rights, including equal employment opportunity, has been a strong advocate of the Chairman of the President's

Meeting New Neighbors
Seattle
Maying can be some fun. We have found out, just as not moving can introduce a new neighbor, so moving can introduce a new neighbor. In an apartment house owned by Nisei, it developed that the new neighbors were the old neighbors, and the old neighbors were the new neighbors.

It is surprising to one's faith in the brotherhood of man, that the new neighbors were the old neighbors, and the old neighbors were the new neighbors. In an apartment house owned by Nisei, it developed that the new neighbors were the old neighbors, and the old neighbors were the new neighbors.

With the complexities of today's busy living the casual Sunday call seems to have found less favor among the new neighbors. L.A. Riot Aftermath...
The short-range and long-range programs to avoid a repetition of the riot in Los Angeles are being developed by the responsible leaders and organizations.

Negro pastors have pledged "to reach out to any suffering that will continue to afflict the Negro community and go into areas where poverty, ignorance and poor citizenship have caused our present dilemma."

The Governor has appointed a man commission to investigate underlying and immediate causes and recommend means to prevent recurrence.

City and state officials are pleading for millions of dollars to rehabilitate the Los Angeles Negro community.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., on his arrival in Los Angeles last week, saw the prospect of building a "model community" out of the ashes of the riot.

No means an explanation of the while underlying situation, a Negro psychiatrist last week issued a valid explanation of the riot.

1-Lack of discipline among many youths due to the passive role they played by the rioters. (Family life breakdown.)

2-Conviction that Dr. Negro was not white, but a Negro who is interested only in their own economic gains. (White core exploitation.)

3-Dissatisfaction of people who come to the southeast Los Angeles area for a large percentage of the Negro population.

4-Gradual realization through the rights victories that they are not the "Negro" of the past.

Beyond these factors is the undeniable fact that the job opportunities for the Negro are limited. Many of them are underemployed, thus unable to support their families.

Dr. Jones said that the Negroes are not the "Negro" of the past, but the "Negro" of the future.

The fourfold analysis above is reported by the Los Angeles Times medical writer Harry N. Waisel.

Dr. Jones said that the Negroes are not the "Negro" of the past, but the "Negro" of the future.

From the Frying Pan

Denver, Colo.

REUNION—Our family, whose activities along the road of life have been chronicled in this space on occasion, again for the first time in two years. Mike, the boy, went off to Portland, Ore., just about this time. He left the faculty of Lewis and Clark College. Now he is back with wife and daughter to get acquainted with his mother, sisters and parents, and to give them a chance to know his family. It is a happy occasion, and most of the attention is lavished on Ashley who soon will be a girl and seems to spend half her day, falling down climbing back on her wobbly feet again.

Two years time, and the responsibilities he acquired in college, have added a certain maturity to Mike's demeanor, though he is still not about trying out Christie's skating. He is, it seems to us, a little less pedantic now that he had a chance to find that experience is as important as learning in the education business. He seems more relaxed with the serious matters, a little less intolerant of those who do not see eye to eye with him, his enthusiasm as if dislikes tempered by an understanding that only time can bring.

Teaching was Mike's original professional interest, and though he has been disillusioned by much that he has seen in that field, he is still convinced that he picked the right career. He now has about half of his work completed the way to a doctorate and is looking to the time when he will be the master mechanic's union card in the teaching business—is this.

A TIME OF CHANGE—There was a period when Mike had liked nothing better than to drive into the mountains in a day of trout fishing. So that was what I had planned in one of the things we'd do together when he came for his visit.

But the trip was not to be. Oh yes, he said, fishing was great, but there were so many other things to do that he figured he'd better skip it this time. What I realized was that Mike, in acquiring a wife and child, and responsibilities and new interests, had rather seen his family was amused than go off on a fishing expedition with Dad, which of course is an attitude that is right, and as admirable in a young family man, but hard on fishing. His primary obligations are to his own family, and the sooner the rest of us understand this, the better it will be.

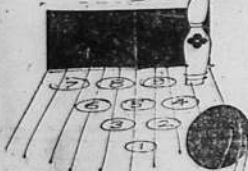

It didn't realize it at the time, but I suppose I drifted from my own parents in the same way after marriage. They had to make their adjustments. This they did, and I am to think of it, the diverse interests of our children were drawing them farther away from their folks with each year, and we really haven't done much to try to bring them to the old apronskins. This is all a part of growing up, for both parents and offspring.

THE OTHERS—Since this turned out to be a family day, it seems the others should be mentioned. After Mike's return, now winding up a summer job as a clerk-typist, away to go back to the University of Colorado for the fourth year. She wants to teach, too. Her subject is English. She will be a high school senior this year. He started with a maintenance crew the Monday after school was over and he'll be working until school opens. It's been a busy summer for him.

And Christie will be entering high school as a sophomore. All these youngsters are young adults with interests of their own and an understandable desire for privacy. You'll find them reading less and less about them in this space than that's the way most of them would prefer it.
