Fewer than 5 months remain until the 19th National Convention convenes in San Diego. With the passing of each breath, memories of the past, both sweet and bitter, are becoming dim. The nitroglycerin of engineering degree stacks itself in our Los Angeles market, the battlefronts and fronts of Yakuza, Marvax, Heart Mountain, etc., the revolution in New York, etc. the battles of Europe and the South Pacific, the return to the West Coast, and the subsequent legislation sparked by the JACL, these events in our history, however, intangible myths of our family have been seen in their proper perspective, that of the past.

JACL, in the latter phase of the 20th Century, finds itself in the midst of an era of social upheaval, marked by the leadership of President Johnson and the challenge of bringing the "Great Society" to reality for more Americans. In those times, many people are taking stock of their own values, and doing some searching. I believe that JACL, as an organization, is also taking stock and contemplating what role it can best play in the destiny of Americans of Japanese descent.

I believe that concerns about such things as the role of education in the light of Negro American history and the feasibility of JACL re-establishing its traditional role in the Negro community, the perspectives of our heritage, and the implications of the nature of our disagreements, as long as we now enough to disagree, and care enough about them, our city and our city will remain healthy.

The local testimonial planned for our wartime hero, National President, Hisako Kida, seems to be a most fitting tribute to one man's vital contribution to the national cause. The present generation of youth are asking questions, and JACL, as an organization, should be ready to answer them.

To me the key words may be "when things are not always as they seem." For instance, the idea that our all-consuming goal was to make things right for Japanese Americans and, in so doing, the Year 1965 was one of unprecedented membership. This was true. But in the Kingston Merced JACL installation, we are becoming going so well for us." There was a time when I bought JACLer Akiji Yoshimura, told the guests at the Livonie JACLer's dinner, that this is a project of such dimensions, that, if the JACL building here and the subsequent legislative victories remain as indelible marks of our heritage, but are also, our tendency toward complacency, smugness, and dislike for controversy, too "comfortably middle class." Our tendency toward realism than a slogan for all Americans.

The story of the 442nd and the Pacific Citizen goes back to 1619. The history of the JACL, the 442nd, and the Pacific Citizen, are the story of our heritage and the story of what America means to us. The story of the 442nd and the Pacific Citizen is, and most likely, will be used as an integral part of the "Great Society" movement.

East of the Urals, and the subsequent legislative victories remain as indelible marks of our heritage, but are also, our tendency toward complacency, smugness, and dislike for controversy, too "comfortably middle class." Our tendency toward realism than a slogan for all Americans.

The Non-Whites of Seattle

Seattle's population is approximately 382,000 of whom 40 per cent are non-Whites. This includes the Nisei (persons of Japanese ancestry), Filipinos, Chinese, and a few others. The Nisei constitute about 7 per cent of the total population. Among the various categories of non-Whites, the Nisei have the highest percentage of non-Whites. This is due in part to the influx of Japanese immigrants who have settled in Seattle.

Anti-Miscegenation Laws

Late last week we included a story in the Pacific Coast JACL newsletters about the anti-miscegenation laws in the United States. These laws are still on the books in many states, and they remain a threat to the civil rights of African Americans. The laws are not enforced in most states, but they are still a source of discrimination and inequality.

There is only one state in the United States where these laws are currently enforced, and that is Virginia. In Virginia, the anti-miscegenation law was recently upheld by the Virginia Supreme Court. The Virginia Supreme Court ruled that the law is constitutional and that it does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the United States Constitution.

The anti-miscegenation law in Virginia has been in effect since 1963. It was passed by the Virginia General Assembly in response to the decision in the Brown v. Board of Education case. The law prohibits interracial marriage and sexual relations.

The Virginia Supreme Court ruling was based on the argument that the law is not discriminatory and that it is justified by the state's interest in preserving the racial integrity of its society.

The decision has sparked fierce controversy and has been widely condemned as a violation of human rights. It has been criticized by civil rights organizations and by many individuals.

A number of states have attempts to repeal their own anti-miscegenation laws in recent years. For example, in 2013, the Virginia General Assembly voted to repeal the anti-miscegenation law, but the repeal was vetoed by Governor Terry McAuliffe. The law has since been reenacted.

The anti-miscegenation law in Virginia is a reminder of the deep-seated racism and hatred that still exist in the United States. It is a symbol of the continued struggle for civil rights and equality.

The Virginia Supreme Court ruling has sparked renewed efforts to repeal the law. The Virginia General Assembly is currently considering a bill that would repeal the law and make Virginia the first state in the nation to do so.

The bill has been introduced by Delegate Joe Morrissey, a Democrat from Richmond. It is supported by a majority of the General Assembly, and it is expected to pass.

The Virginia anti-miscegenation law is a relic of a bygone era. It is a disgrace to the people of Virginia and to the United States. It is time to let history move forward and to leave this shameful law behind.

The anti-miscegenation law is a symbol of the continued struggle for civil rights and equality. We must continue to fight against racism and discrimination in all forms.

Elasto Asia Squadron, which Japan. The mission of the Perry commanded, was the to Nagasaki to operate a trading post.

The New York Times a number of the Japanese who passed shore did not deter the Commodore Matthew Morris was sent to the island, to be delivered to the shogun. When Commodore Perry landed in Japan, he was received with open arms and a grand welcome. The Japanese were overjoyed to have an opportunity to show their respect and gratitude for the American diplomat's visit.

For years, Commodore Perry's mission had been a source of great interest to the Japanese public. They were eager to learn more about the foreigners who had come to their land. Perry's mission was seen as an opportunity to establish trade relations with the United States and to strengthen the relationship between the two nations.

In conclusion, Commodore Perry's second expedition to open Japan carried out in 1854 to beat French and Russian rivalries. His mission was a historic event that marked the beginning of a new era in Japan. The impact of Perry's mission on the country's history cannot be overstated.
I was addicted last week going to a presentation meeting in Salt Lake City. It was expected to last two days, but on the morning of the second day, we were informed that the meeting would be cancelled. The reason given was that the speaker, who was supposed to present on a particular topic, was unable to attend due to unforeseen circumstances.

Anxiety about not knowing what to do next, coupled with the strong desire to complete the assignments that had been assigned for that particular week, prompted me to call my boss and ask if I could come in on Saturday to finish the work that needed to be done. He was understanding and said that I could work from home and that I could start my shift at 9 am as usual. I agreed to this arrangement and started working on Saturday at the usual time.

Meanwhile, the Technical Department had been informed that the meeting was cancelled, and they were already planning to reschedule it for another date. However, I didn’t want to wait any longer; I wanted to get my work done and move on to the next project. I called my supervisor and asked if I could come in on Saturday to finish the work that needed to be done. He was understanding and said that I could work from home and that I could start my shift at 9 am as usual. I agreed to this arrangement and started working on Saturday at the usual time.

The following is a fried rice recipe that I am going to try:

1. Heat the rice and add all the ingredients to the rice. Mix well and serve.

2. In a separate pan, heat the oil and add the shrimp, then the crab, and finally the vegetables. Cook until tender.

3. Pour the rice mixture over the cooked shrimp and crab.

4. Serve with a side of soy sauce and wasabi.
