JACL's Voice

Over the years, the strongest voice of the JACL has been the Pacific Citizen. From the Imperial Valley through Puyallup Valley, from Marysville and Watsonville to the Snake River, across the mountain plains and through the midwest to New York City, the Pacific Citizen is avidly read.

The PC is the catalyst that week after week binds

Citizen has done and continues to do an excellent job

The time is rapidly approaching, however, for the JACL to take a long, hard look into the future of the publication. What role will it play in the lives of our Jr. JACLers as they become JACLers? Will the readership increase as the Sansei take over the reins from the Nisei, or will it decrease?

The vernacular publications are well aware that they are in the twilight zone of the Japanese language newspapers. Will the non-Japanese reading Nisei-Sansei communities support an all-English daily or weekly publication? This is an area into which we are rapidly entering and to which the Pacific Citizen will be a major factor, like it or not, in the future plans of any publication catering to a Nisei-Sansei readership.

Among the plans the PC Board hopes to institute

Among the plans the PC Board hopes to institute will be a standing committee to establish guide posts and chart a course that our publication will take in the years to come. The committee should be able to anticipate the changing requirements of the organiza-tion and its membership and direct the Pacific Citizen rather than the PC following the needs of the memberly welcome because it came and and its inclineership and direct the Pacific Cilizen from a fellow Cal alumnus, rather than the PC following the needs of the membersteve Nakashima, whom I had ship, Jr. JACL representation on this committee is a not seen for a number of must.

MIS Tribute

This weekend, veterans and friends of the Military Intelligence School (MIS) are holding their 25th anni-versary reunion in San Francisco.

Unfortunately—for most Americans, for Japanese Americans, and for them—even after a quarter of a century, most of their dramatic, inspired, and constructive service is still too little known, too little revealed, and too little appreciated by the public in general.

Indeed, for too many, the only Japanese Americans who served with unusual valor and distinction in World War II were the Nisei infantrymen of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team.

Without in any way detracting from the glory of the 442nd, for nothing that can be said or written can derogate that heroic record, we believe that this is an appropriate opportunity to pay long overdue and deserved tribute to the veterans of MiS and their fellow Ramloops, B.C., 18-year-old Nisei in G-2 who served so valiantly in the Pacific War. Linda Yokome.

while there is little question that, as repeatedly stated by so many military leaders, the 442nd is the most decorated unit in American history for its size and length of service, there is even less doubt among the knowledgeable that the graduates of MIS and Nisei in military intelligence contributed more to victory in the Pacific than gid the 442nd in Europe.

And, together, Japanese Americans who served And, together, Japanese Americans who served in both the European Theater and in the far reaches of the Pacific established for all time to come that "Americanism is a matter of the mind and the heart, and not of race or ancestry", that Americans of Japanese ancestry are completely loyal to the country of their birth and citizenship. These Nisei GIs, probably more than any other factor, defeated prejudice against those of Languages ancestry and your accentance for those of Japanese ancestry and won acceptance for those of the Japanese race in this land, with greater educational, economic, political, and social opportunities than ever before.

the Fourth Army Intelligence Language School, the forerunner of the Military Intelligence Language Schools at Camp Savage and Fort Snelling, Minnesota, was activated at the Presidio of San Francisco.

This experimental institution was the chiid" of then Lt. Col. John Weckerling and then Capt. Kai Rasmussen, both of whom correctly believed that qualified Japanese language specialists would be needed in case of armed confrontation with the Japanese military. After all, because of American participation in World War I, the German order of battle, etc., were relatively well understood, but practically nothing was known of the Japanese.

Although it was an admitted gamble to use Japanese Americans because many in high places felt that they could not be trusted in battle against those of their same blood and race, these two former language officers were willing to stake their professional reputations that their faith in the allegiance of the Nisei would be vindicated. would be vindicated.

Now Col. Rasmussen was the Commandant of that first school and of the succeeding wartime language schools and now California Superior Court Judge John Aiso was the director of academic training.

A few months after the attack on Pearl Harbor, A few months after the attack on Feari Harbor, 35 Nisei language specialists were graduated and sent out against the Pacific enemy. In the Battle of Guadalcanal and thereafter in every battle for every island in the vast Pacific, these Nisei G-2 language specialists proved themselves as the "eyes and ears" not only of the American troops but also of the Allies.

And they engaged in combat intelligence even though they were liable to fire by both the enemy and their own troops. In fact, they were considered to be so important and valuable that every Nisei G-2er had two or more non-Japanese American soldiers assigned to guard them when possible against tragic mistakes.

Among their more significant contributions were the translations of the battle plans of both the Imperial Japanese Navy and the Imperial Japanese Army that contributed to the defeat of the Japanese fleet and the successful invasion of the Philippine Islands.

we are noperful that at this reunion the thousands of MIS veterans will recall and put down on paper their personal stories of their part in the CBI and the various Pacific campaigns, for these stories should reveal heroic sagas that may equal and perhaps even surpass those of the 442nd. In the Pacific, we know that some stories of brother fighting brother, cousin fighting cousin, son fighting father could be retold in all their dramatic implications. dramatic implications.

Here in Washington, we have met from time to time with Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby, who was General MacArthur's Chief of Intelligence, and heard from him of the many and great contributions made by the Nisei in G-2. In fact, we have quoted him in congressional testimony to the effect that the use of Misei intelligence troops shortened the Pacific War by many months, prevented hundreds of thousands of American casualties, and saved millions of dollars.

Gen. Willoughby has shown us some of the official

Gen. Willoughby has shown us some of the official reports he has regarding the outstanding exploits of the Nisei language specialists, many of which he has included in the Official Reports of General MacArthur that are now being published at long last by the Department of the Army Office of Military History.

Recently too, here in Washington, we had lunch with Col. Rasmussen and discussed the activation of the 442nd. We both recalled that were it not for the fact that the Nisei serving in the Pacific had compiled such a remarkable record, it might not have been possible to persuade the Army to activate the 100th Infantry Battalion in Hawaii and subsequently the 442nd. And, combat officers who knew from personal experience the loyalty of their Japanese American troops in combat intelligence were among the most vigorous supporters of the plan that eventually resulted in the formation of the 442nd and the reinstitution of Selective Service for all qualified Nisei in World tion of Selective Service for all qualified Nisei in World

And, these Nisei who fought so well against the Japanese enemy refuted the racist criticism of the 442nd, that Japanese Americans were effective against the German enemy but would not fight the Japanese.

As the veterans of MIS and of the Pacific War as the veterans of Alls and of the Pacific war meet in reunion, we who served in the 442nd proudly salute them as fellow soldiers.

And we Japanese Americans who now enjoy such unprecedented goodwill and opportunities pay tribute to them for having contributed so much to the present and the future of those of Japanese ancestry in this land of our common citizenship. land of our common citizenship.

From the Frying Pan

NISEI ANGLE—This series of stories from Japan wouldn't be complete, it seems, without a report on the Nisel. From all accounts they're doing very well, thank you, and that includes both those who sought fame and fortune there after the war and those who were stranded there by the war and obliged to remain.

T. John Fujii was telling about some of them one T. John Fujii was felling about some of them one morning over a cup of coffee. "I have to do a lot of checking by telephone," he said. "Usually I have to reach one of the big wheels of a company who is in a position to give me the information I need, and every once in a while I come across a fellow whose Japanese doesn't quite ring 100 per cent true. So I switch to English, and I find I'm talking to a Nisei who's a director or a vice president of some up and coming firm."

Fujii count to write an autobiography.

Fujii ought to write an autobiography. Son of a Methodist minister, he was born in Japan and was brought to the United States as an infant. He was among the first of the Nisei newspapermen, although technically he is not a Nisei. Unable under the then laws to become an American citizen, he went to the Orient before World War II, came through some unbelievable experiences and found a place in Tokyo journalism. Currently he is with the Tokyo bureau of Fairchild Publications, an American firm which issues a string of trade journals, and keeping a fatherly eye open for a likely husband for his daughter.

For a time, many Nisel faced a bleak future in Japan. Bigtime Japanese employers weren't quite sure they wanted to have anything to do with these people who might look Japanese, but didn't think or act like them. And many American employers found the Nisel. them. And many American employers found the Nisei didn't know enough about Japan, Japanese business and Japanese ways, to be worth hiring, particularly when they were looked upon with some disfavor by the Japanese themselves.

That has changed. The Nisei in Japan have made a place for themselves by ability and perseverance, just as they have in the United States.

VISITING - Our schedule was extremely tight and it was impossible to visit as many Nisei friends as we would have liked. We did, however, catch George Togasaki, certainly a senior statesman among Nisei in Japan, who was in town for a change. Well past an age when most men would have retired, Togasaki has an office with the Fuji Travel Service on the ninth floor of a new building across from Yurakucho Station, on one of Tokyo's busiest corners. There he spends much of his time looking after Paters Unterpended.

on one of Tokyo's busiest corners. There he spends much of his time looking after Rotary International matters. He took me to lunch at the Nippon Club's plush quarters atop the new Kokusai Building which offers a fine view of the Imperial Palace grounds.

Across the street from Togasaki's office is the Asahi Building where the Associated Press has its bureau. Shin Higashi, a Canadian Nisei, and Day Inoshita are veterans of the AP's business side, while Kay Tateishi, familiar to many older Nisei in Southern California, is a night editor.

Tokyo's newspapers seem to be prospering; at least they are moving into new buildings away from the heart of the city and are no longer easy to visit. For this reason we didn't get down to the Asahi Evening News or the Japan Times, but did catch up with Mas Ogawa, a director of the Times, long enough for a chat one night.

Seeing the two boys practicing in their "judo-gi" tonight, the old man (this one) decided to give Mark, the older one, a bit of competition. The boy is 14 and is a "bug" on physical fitness and judo. Well, the round ended up with the old man (the same one) puffing a victory that did not come as easily as I had anticipated. Mark ominously promised that it would be tougher when he gets his brown belt.

SPORTING SEPTUAGENARIAN

And then I recalled my mother in her more youthful days. She's a septuagenarian now but of course she was not always so. She was a "good sport" and I remember with boyhood admiration how my mother, small but tough, would, as a lark, take on Nisei boys learning judo. And mine was a real mother for she'd invariably win. But I vividly recall one evening when my idol was crushed right before my youthful eyes. Masayoshi Tsubota, who used to be a regular and steady victim of my mother's playful challenges, one day was suddenly tougher as he'd never been before. And then, too, ole' Mom wasn't getting any younger either. Anyway, Masayoshi put on a "waza" and Mom hit the floor. After that my mother never did challenge the lads anymore, at least not that I recall. And that the lads anymore, at least not that I recall. And that

CAN'T WIN

Every so often frau Vicki and I engage in a bit of light horseplay in the house. On such occasions the youngest one joins in the fray to "rescue" his mother and mercilessly pummels the old man (you guessed it, still this one). So whichever way it goes, it's risky business around here with this one (the old man, end ing up getting it.

I don't know that there's a moral to any of this.

But much as I'd like to believe otherwise, the old man is not only getting it but is also getting there.

Question: I was born in Europe but came to the United States with my father, who was in the diplomatic service, when in the diplomatic service and have had several children. My father has long since returned to Europe. Do I have any chance of becoming a lawful permanent resident and an American citizen without having to leave the United States?

Answer: Technically, you are deportable, but it is very likely you will be able to regularize your status and become a lawful permanent resident. Your husband should file a petition in Service and the service of "immedia relative status." At the same time you should file an application for change of status to that of permanent resident alien. In view of the fact that your husband and children are American citizens and assuming you can prove good moral character, it is likely that the immigration Service will process your case witout placing you the suggested steps, you may wish to consult a voluntary agency or an attorney specializing in this field of work. Ye Editor's Desk

The high cost of seeking public office is a scandal of sorts among rich and poor alike. This may explain why Congress, in the final week of the last session, accepted without excessive debate a revolutionary plain to subsidize presidential campaigns from the public treasury

Starting with the 1967 income tax returns filed in Starting with the 1967 income tax returns filed in the spring of 1968, each taxpayer may check a box directing the Treasury to deposit $1 of his tax payment in a special campaign fund. A political party receiving more than 5 million votes in the preceding presidential election will receive $1 for each vote in excess of that number to cover actual presidential campaign expenses. To discourage splinter parties, no contribution expenses. To discourage splinter parties, no contribu-tion will be made for the first 5 million votes.

In support of this new plan, the argument has been advanced that it will free the presidential candidates from the influence of favor-seeking private contributors. If this argument is valid for presidential races, it can next be logically extended to congressional races. The state income tax collecting agencies might also be included in such an extension of public sub-

All of this comment appears pertinent at this time for the Pacific Citizen, as a newspaper of general circulation, solicits and publishes paid political advertisements from all political candidates. The publication of such advertisements does not constitute endorsement of any candidate. The Japanese American Citizens League, publishers of the Pacific Citizen is a severy day language. Even today the more complete Japanese dictionaries show as many as thirty thousand proverbs and proverbs and proverbial sayings in use. ments from all pointical candinates. The publication of such advertisements does not constitute endorsement of any candidate. The Japanese American Citizens League, publishers of the Pacific Citizen, is a strictly nonpartisan organization.

It appears that most Japanese proverbs fall into three general categories. These categories are based on the origins of the individual proverb or saying. First are those that Especially in the state senate will this fundamental political phenomenon be most evident as Los Angeles County only had one state senator for its 6 million residents. As of this week, there are 14-plus state senators representing the county. After the 1970 census, it is conceivable a few more will be added.

The concept of representative legislative bodies always recalls the words of Lincoln: "government of the people, by the people and for the people." We will not be surprised if the intricacies of this concrete political process are debated within JACL to have the National Council more obedient to the will of the general mem-

Since JACLers subscribe to the U.S. Constitution, whatever principles of representation that can be applied upon the national organization might seem worthy of consideration. The 1964 Supreme Court decision on reapportionment makes the vote of one representative carry the same value or weight of a fellow representative.

At the JACL national council, each chapter (regardless of its membership count) has one vote. The Jr. JACLers have a modified proportional representation plan, each additional 30 member good for one vote plus a $10 levy for each additional vote.

Seattle
One March day 2½ years to ago, the citizens of Seattle expressed their belief that open tousing will not be achieved through legislation.

Education is necessary to change attitudes, they said, and what's needed to achieve open housing are voluntary programs.

Seattle was then following the paths that other urban northern cities trod a generation ago. Public apathy had permitted, and in instances, encouraged the ghettos to develop and grow, with little or no regard to its consequences. The results of that apathy have been recently evidenced in Watta, San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia

From classical Buddhist scripture we find: Kariru toking Image of thousands and tens of thousands.

Another Buddhist inspired proverb is: Au wa wakare no Hajimari (meeting is the beginning of parting).

In the third and last category we find a number of Japanese proverbs that have direct counterparts in Western usage.

It is an open question as to thus thow much direct influence the West has had in this area.

It is an open question as to just how much direct influence the West has had in this area, but we include the following as examples:

The Seattle Real Estate Board adopted a fair practices code, stating that all persons regardless of race, religion or response to the control of the control As examples:

Most recently, the Urban League proposed a program to "professionalize" the voluntary housing listing service. The purpose would be to reverse the trend toward the increasing segregated housing situations.
