Problems Facing Asian Americans

1. On the April 14th, 1970, Asian American community leaders in the U.S. held their first national conference titled "The Asian American People and Their Communities: A New Paradigm for Community Development." The conference was held in San Francisco and was attended by over 300 leaders from across the country. The conference focused on the issues facing Asian American communities and the need for a new paradigm for community development.

2. In 1972, the JACL (Japanese American Citizens League) held its annual conference in Los Angeles. The conference focused on the issues facing Asian American communities and the need for a new paradigm for community development.

3. The Reversion of Okinawa and the JACL

The Reversion of Okinawa, which took place in 1972, had a significant impact on the JACL (Japanese American Citizens League). The JACL, which had been active in advocating for the rights of Japanese Americans, had to reevaluate its role in the context of the changes taking place in Okinawa. The JACL's stance on the issue of Okinawa was complex, as it had to balance its support for the rights of Japanese Americans with its support for the United States and its allies in the region.

The JACL's decision to support the Reversion of Okinawa was not popular with all members of the JACL. Some members of the JACL opposed the reversion, arguing that it would lead to a loss of American influence in the region and that it would not benefit Japanese Americans. Others supported the reversion, arguing that it was necessary to maintain American influence in the region and that it would benefit Japanese Americans.

The JACL's decision to support the Reversion of Okinawa was a significant event in the history of the JACL, as it marked a shift in the organization's stance on issues related to the United States and its allies in the region. The JACL's decision also had implications for the future of the organization, as it set a precedent for the JACL's support for the rights of Japanese Americans in a changing geopolitical landscape.
From the Frying Pan

Denver, Colo.
The HAGIWARAS of KETCHIKAN—It was the end of the summer job for 16-year-old Tony Hagiyana. He had landed himself a summer job in an Alaska salmon cannery. At the time he was bitten by a small salmon and was rushed to the cannery hospital. Tony was discharge after three days of recuperation, he was influenced by some news reports on the bad conditions in Ketchikan Alaska. The next day he and his father left for home. The family name was Hagiyana which was somewhat unusual in a period when most families had Japanese names. Tony Hagiyana ran a bakery where he turned out the best danish and cookies in town. Tony Hagiyana boys were taught how to cook, but were not allowed to serve hot water to guests.

A few years after Tony left the Hagiyana family and left to Seattle and quickly became a part of the Japanese American community. They had three children and their eldest daughter was born in Ketchikan. The family moved to Seattle in 1931. When they moved to Seattle, they found a home where they enjoyed complete acceptance. They also enjoyed the opportunity to share their unique heritage and culture with others.

When the war came along and Seattle's Japanese American residents were stranded in the internment camps at Puyallup, they were offered a recreation program. They were taught how to make beer and they were able to make the best beer in town. Hagiyana is a name that has been synonymous with beer making.

Strong bill in HR 12208

In the House of Representatives, Mr. Frank Longo, a Democrat from Pennsylvania, introduced HR 12208, the Landmark Rule. HR 12208 was introduced on July 21, 1972. The bill is designed to ensure that the rule is applied fairly and consistently across all areas of the country. It also provides for the rule to be reviewed periodically to ensure that it is still relevant and effective.

Forces merger of SCHOOL DIST.

SEATTLE—After three years of effort to merge the School Districts of Seattle and Bellevue, applications were taken this week for the new Unified School District.

The applications were taken at the Seattle Municipal Building and at the Bellevue City Hall. Applications were accepted from all districts within the proposed unified district. The new district would have a student population of approximately 100,000 and a budget of approximately $100 million.

Seattle University seeks more minority students

The University of Washington seeks more minority students. The university is one of the few universities in the country that does not accept applications from minority students. The university has stated that it is committed to increasing the number of minority students on its campus.

Ariyoshi addresses 400 at OC inaugural

By MARTY K. DONDA

EAST AUBURN — Asia Week's annual kick-off dinner at the Drake Inn, sent in a wave of hospitality and goodwill by Japanese Ambassador to the U.S. Taiichi Kusaka, who presented a haku, a white scarf, as a symbol of brotherhood. The event was attended by 400 guests, including the Ambassador's wife, Akiko, and 11 other members of the Japanese diplomatic corps, as well as many other guests from various countries. The dinner included a programme of speeches and music, and the Ambassador spoke of the close relationship between Japan and the U.S., and the importance of cultural exchange and understanding. He also expressed his hope that the hosted event would help to further strengthen this relationship, and to promote mutual cooperation and friendship between the two countries. The event was a huge success, with many guests expressing their appreciation for the hospitality and the wonderful evening of cultural exchange. The next day, the Ambassador and his wife attended a number of other events and activities, further solidifying the strong bonds between Japan and the U.S.
