Major Sea Battle

Action is disorganized and concentrated on detail. Though the text might remind the reader of the individual combats in the Illad, in contrast to the Illad, the language is undistinguished.

A book for the battle survivors or the experts, but not for the general public. Outnumbered in men and tips, the Japanese faced cat odds. Lacking planes of trained pilots, indered a a shortage of oil, misled a shortage of oil, misled a stortage of oil, misled a stortage of oil, misled or erroceous intelligence resorts, they would also suffer com aimost total lack of ounnunication among the units supposed to deliver coordinated attack.

There would be four major actions in the coming battle, sometimes described as the greatest battle in naval history. Each side would employ every naval weapon except the mine. There would be heavy and light gunfire, bombing, strafing, rocketing and torpedoing by land-based and carrier-based planes. There would be torpedo attacks by submarines, destroyers, and torpedo boats.

When the battle would end,
