U.S. JUDGE RULES 3-1 RATIO FOR S.F. POLICE DEPT.

1970 Census Shows San Francisco with Minorities at 43%

SAN FRANCISCO—A federal judge has ruled San Francisco Police Department's existing 3-1 minority ratio is inadequate for the city's 43% minority population.

Judge Robert F. Peckham, of U.S. District Court in San Francisco, held the police force must be increased to conform to the new requirements under federal law. He gave the city 90 days to comply with the ruling.

The ruling followed a nine-month trial and the Verdict of 48-year-old attorney and civil rights leader Kenneth O. O'Bannon, who tested the city's existing policies on the hiring and promotions of police officers.

The judge said the city's police force must be increased to reflect the city's population.

He added that the 1970 Census showed the city's population was 43% minority, a figure he predicted would rise to 45% by 1980.

The judge also ruled that the city must implement a program to increase minority hiring and promotions in the police force.

Calif. AG offers apologies over 'racist' bulletin

CALIFORNIA—Attorney General George Deukmejian offered an apology for a recent bulletin that he said was intended to inform police officers of the latest developments in the law.

The bulletin, which was titled "Racial Problems in the Law," contained a controversial chapter on "The Role of the Police in the Community." It included a section on "The Law of Police Brutality," which Deukmejian said was intended to provide officers with a better understanding of the law.

The bulletin was widely criticized for its tone and content, with many outraged by its alleged racism.

The bulletin was distributed to police officers in the state, and it quickly became a target of protests and criticism.

High court balances interests of public policy against individuals

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court of the United States has struck down a federal law that would have prohibited states from imposing any restrictions on the sale of tobacco to minors.

In a 5-4 decision, the court ruled that the law was unconstitutional because it conflicted with state control over public policy.

The law, known as the "Tobacco Control Act," was enacted by Congress in 1990 to regulate the sale of tobacco products.

The commercial product mentioned in the act is "tobacco products," which includes cigarettes, chewing tobacco, and other similar products. The act prohibits states from imposing any restrictions on the sale of tobacco products to minors.

The court's decision was based on the constitutional principle that states have the right to regulate public policy.

The college was established in 1973 to provide training in international law and diplomacy.

Harris Magazine ast too long ago featured "Rameez Me Not at Woodford Manor," the go-getter who cofounded the independent monthly. As a boy in the city under attack from the Japanese invasion, he showed great promise in the arts. When he grew up, he became a writer, journalist, and editor, spending much of his time on the West Coast. Today, he is the editor of the Pacific Citizen, a weekly newspaper in San Francisco. In his free time, he enjoys playing tennis, swimming, and hiking in the mountains. He lives with his family in a small town near San Francisco. He is a member of the board of directors of the Japanese American National Committee and a fellow of the Institute for Advanced Study. His work has been featured in numerous publications, including the New York Times, the Washington Post, and the Los Angeles Times. He is a native of San Francisco and a veteran of the Vietnam War.

SUNNY SAN DIEGO—The good folks of the JACF (Japanese American Citizens' Friendship) Society in San Diego had a grand time when they dropped out of the tube here recently. They were the first to find out, and their names are on the list of most attractive cities in the world. It's a great feeling. The San Diego JACF chapter was celebrating its 10th anniversary, and they seemed to be in high spirits and dancing with joy. In the middle of the celebration, the 20-member board of directors gathered to pour out their personal feelings and share their experiences with the rest of the group. They talked about the city's scenic beauty, the diverse cultural activities, and the friendly atmosphere. It was a great moment, and everyone was happy to be there.

But there are also times when we are political or economic minorities. And sometimes, we are simply minorities because we think differently than the majority.

Geologist says Japan emerged from north coast
By Edwin T. Uson

Japanese geologists have been studying the origins of Japan for many years. Now, they have come to a surprising conclusion: Japan is not an island, but rather emerged from the north coast of Asia.

The new theory, which is based on geological evidence, suggests that Japan was once part of the Asian continent and only later became an island. This is in contrast to the traditional view that Japan is a result of volcanic activity and tectonic plate movement.
