NON-NUCLEAR PRINCIPLES

Concern the people in Japan express over A-bombs never ceases. As the only nation to suffer a nuclear attack in war, it has followed what is now known as the "three non-nuclear principles": Japan will not make nuclear weapons, Japan will not possess them, nor allow them to be introduced into the country.

Since the U.S.-Japan security treaty was revised in 1960, assuring that U.S. could not bring nuclear weapons to Japan without seeking Japan's specific approval under what has come to be known as the "prior consultation" system, then Prime Minister Eisaku Sato in 1968 enunciated an even more definite policy as one of the pillars of Japanese diplomacy: the three non-nuclear principles.

For this stance and for signing the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, Sato this past week was named a co-winner of the 1974 Nobel Peace Prize.

The same week out of Washington, a Japanese newspaper perusing the Congressional Record of Sept. 10, reported a retired U.S. flag officer in testimony before Congress said: "At the time these nuclear-armed ships call at Japanese or other foreign ports, the nuclear weapons are not removed."

The testimony appeared to contradict 14 years of U.S. promises not to bring nuclear weapons into the country without prior consultations.

Admiral Gene LaRocque, former 7th Fleet Commander and nuclear expert who now heads the Center for Defense Information, was urging Congress to tighten controls over American nuclear weapons against possible theft by terrorist groups.

The Japanese government asked Washington to officially clarify whether the U.S. has been keeping its long-standing agreement of prior consultation regarding any such movement of nuclear weapons into its ports.

What reply Ambassador Yasukawa in Washington may have received by now may be more elucidating than the press conference statement of the Defense Department which last week held the section security pact was being followed.

but no word about stationing of American nuclear weapons anywhere in the world.

The JACL fall flight charter tourists, who arrived in Tokyo about the same time the news broke, now know the fury this subject of nuclear arms generates in Japan. Front pages in both the morning and afternoon press Monday were solid with news and reactions.

Leftist elements responded to the news by massing 6,000 demonstrators at Yokosuka, principal U.S. naval base in Japan. The Japan Council Against Nuclear Bombs was planning to "lay siege" upon the U.S. Embassy and Japanese Diet Building in Tokyo.

The ruling Liberal Democratic Party, only political group in Japan supporting the nation's defense ties with the U.S., thus has experienced another "shokku," another headache that may seriously affect the scheduled visit of President Ford next month.

Massive demonstrations in 1960 against renewal of the U.S.-Japan security treaty led to the cancellation of President Eisenhower's planned visit of Japan and the fall of the Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi government.

The better news the following day that former Prime Minister Eisaku Sato was named co-winner of the Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts to limit nuclear weapons and stabilizing conditions in East Asia didn't seem to settle the nuclear question.

Japan is still wrestling with its own policy of nuclear power, prompted by the case of the Mutsu, Japan's first nuclear-powered ship still adrift at sea (44 days as of this writing) off northern Japan since it developed a small leak in its nuclear reactor. The Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka government wants local governments to cooperate in pushing nuclear power projects because of the growing demand for energy in face of the mounting shortages of oil, electricity and other sources of power.

If Japan's non-nuclear principles gain worldwide currency, the Nobel Prize committee will surely feel its 1974 selection should have been singularity past was being followed.

JACL Convention

Editor:

I've been reading with amusement some of the letters commenting on the Convention because I find that most people didn't understand the real issues at stake. Purpose of the Orange County JACL resolution (to reallocate the National budget to cover more regional needs, etc.) and the reason we went to caucus and talk to other districts were to let them know what was going on.

The PSWDC has been outspoken and critical of how the National Headquarters has operated the past two years. It seems, like in the past, other districts thought we were just giving National a bad time because we weren't getting everything down here, which is not the reason...

As for Don Hayashi, I challenged him at the National Convention because he was deliberately making claims about the funds National had received that were not true to justify the existence of a large headquarters staff... Although our resolution was defeated, and I can certainly understand why the Council could not agree with all of our points, the purpose of the resolution was served.

HENRY S. SAKAI
Orange County JACL

Several weeks have passed since the convention, and after the enthusiasm and euphoria have worn off, my succinct afterthought might be phrased as: "The song has ended but the melody lingers on."

Not to be too cynical but the malady in the form of apathy is the perennial disease of the JACL and it's probably here to stay. This was evident in the Nomination Committee meeting when the District representatives expressed their difficulty in coming up with candidates for National officers.

As I have been attending the conventions off and on for the past 28 years, I've noticed that the old timers are becoming fewer in number as the years pass by. But I must state that the old timers are still in command as they are endowed with perspective that age and experience can bring. However, I would not underestimate the power of the younger generation as they have the energy and drive to get things done. But unfortunately, the youth lack the interest and are not joining our organization.

In spite of our shortcomings, the positive note is that we have Shig Sugiyama to lead us toward our goals and objectives during the next two crucial years. How we make out these coming two years will determine the future of the JACL, but I have confidence in Shig and his supporting cast of newly elected officers.

As far as the Convention business goes, it is difficult to grasp the magnitude of the new budget with its greatly expanded program. I'm sure that the delegates were shell-shocked by the spiraling rate of inflation during these past few months and adopted it after much thought.

Whether we can increase our membership with the $3-00 increase in dues remains to be seen. However, we must remember that much of the increase will be diverted to the Districts to develop and expand their own kind of program on the local level. For example, we in the EDC have been allocated $5,000. What needs to be done now is for us to make an assessment of the needs and priorities of our four chapters. Of course, there is the sum of $41,000 for the Washington Office and perhaps we may have a public relations office in New York if and when funds are available.

One complaint I have about the past convention is that not enough time was allocated for the Council sessions, and it seems that much time was wasted in discussing irrelevant matters. The meeting of the ad hoc committee district governors to revise the budget was a step in the right direction. Perhaps, in the future, much of the business might be processed through small committees to later be acted on by the Council.

With time having run out, I'm sure there were many unanswered questions hanging in the minds of the delegates. I was disappointed that there were no policy statements of the National towards our elderly. Although a few chapters have projects and programs for the Elderly, it seems that the National has a "don't give a damn" attitude of the general society toward our senior citizens. We're all going to die, but the youth but as far as I'm concerned, the elderly should have priority over the ly train our young people to aspire and to become top decision makers in all fields, including public service.

Senator Daniel K. Inouye, Congresswoman Patsy Mink, and Congressman Spark Matsunaga were extremely supportive of JACL's participation in the PCYA program and personally arranged special private sessions and in some cases even took our Sanel to lunch. This was the highlight event of many of our JACL students' stay in Washington.

This coming year the national JACL has been given 75 of the highly sought after positions for the 1975 PCYA program. Seventy-five Japanese American students have the chance to visit Washington, D.C. for a week to participate in what could turn out to be a turning point in their lives.

Over 80% of our JACL chapters can participate in each chapter sponsors one student. We would welcome this type of participation. Each JACL chapter throughout the country should make every attempt to sponsor students from their chapter. Guidelines are now being prepared and will be distributed soon.

JACL chapter boards should seriously consider allocating the necessary funds to sponsor students from your area as you budget for the 1975 JACL activities. I encourage every high school senior to very seriously apply for this opportunity. I hope each parent of an eligible high school senior will urge their young people to apply and to support them in this effort.

One of the founders of the PCYA program has stated, "There is a pride shared by the students and all of those involved, that given an opportunity, the young people of our nation will come forth to attempt a clearer and more perceptive understanding of our system of government. A Presidential Classroom seeks to create a reality out of this idealism."

Our Sanel deserves such an opportunity.

PRESIDENTIAL CLASSROOM

"I was scared and apprehensive about going to Washington, D.C., but now I've decided to change my career goal from micro-biology to public administration and law."

"After meeting with my Congressman and Senator I realize that they are human beings just like anyone else. In fact, I know a lot of people who could do just as good a job in Congress."

"I now know that as a person I can contribute to the running of our national government. Before my Presidential Classroom for Young Americans experience I thought that my opinions or talents were too limited for government. After meeting many important decision makers in D.C., my whole attitude toward myself and my potential has changed. As a Japanese American from a small community I can become a Senator. I know that now, and my outlook on life has changed. I am now aiming much higher."

These are but a few of the comments that Sanel participants of the Presidential Classroom for Young Americans program related to me following their return from Washington, D.C. this past year. Fifteen Japanese Americans who were sponsored by JACL attended this prestigious leadership training program in Washington, D.C. which attracted over 2,000 of the top high school seniors in America for this week-long, high level program in our nation's capital.

When high school students from throughout the nation have the chance to meet in closed personal groups with top public officials, to question these officials personally about contemporary issues, and to examine the inner workings of our national government from a close personal perspective, they come away with an enthusiasm and respect for public service. They also meet and closely associate with other young people from throughout the nation representing a cross-section of attitudes, life styles, and ethnic groups. For many participants this interaction among one's peers was as educational as meeting top officials from government.

In my mind, the most exciting thing for Japanese Americans is that our Sanel participants return with the realization that they have the potential to actively participate and excel in public service. The realization of one's potential is exciting, especially if new horizons have been opened to you. To meet a Cabinet officer such as Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Caspar Weinberger; to personally question Senator John Tunney; or to shake hands and get to know former special prosecutor, Archibald Cox; Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, Chief of Naval Operations, United States Navy; or nationally syndicated columnist, Rowland Evans, is an experience few Americans at any level enjoy. Yet, through the JACL-PCYA program, Japanese American students have this opportunity.

JACL has always placed a high emphasis on good citizenship. We must now active-

THE MAN WHO KNOWS AMERICA—Kaname Saruya, professor of American history at Tokyo Woman's College, undoubtedly is one of Japan's leading experts on the United States. He is in great demand as a commentator and panelist on television, newspaper and magazine editors besiege him for articles. This past summer he spent two months in the U.S. to gather material on the Japanese Americans for a series of articles in the Asahi. These are scheduled to be expanded into a book to be published by Asahi.

What makes Professor Saruya's work worth of note is that he probes into America at a level that few Japanese scholars would consider, or are capable of doing. Two years ago he bought a used Toyota in California, drove all the way to New York and then back to California again. He was accompanied by his wife Shima, and they drove cross-country like any American tourists. They stopped at motels along the way and most of the time they would pick up the makings of sandwiches at supermarkets for lunch. They talked with people they met — gas station attendants, fellow tourists, city officials, newspapermen, scholars at colleges they visited.

Although the Saruyas read and write English quite adequately, they have a bit of difficulty at times making their wishes known. Once, at the University of Colorado, they were trying to explain that many of their lunches were eaten at McDonald's hamburger stands. Somehow their audience couldn't catch the word McDonald's; they kept hearing it as "doughnuts." Another time, in Arkansas, they couldn't get over to a service station attendant that they wanted to fill up with regular gas. Finally, in exasperation, Saruya shouted: "Full tank," and that got the job done.

Driving across this vast land in a used car is not an undertaking to be tackled lightly. On this last trip they had one of their most disheartening experiences. Professor Saruya, I've often thought that the office of the National President is so demanding in terms of time and money that a nominal salary is due for the office. There may be a time when we will not be able to get the most qualified person to accept this position due to the above-mentioned factor. As I did not wait to publish any of the Convention information which has already appeared in the PC, these are some of my thoughts, and encourage our members, young and old, to articulate their thoughts through the News Notes.

On Margin

LOS ANGELES — Toujours gai, Archie, toujours gai—Monday, Sept. 30, was my husband's last day before leaving the Community Redevelopment Agency's Little Tokyo office as project manager.

From the day he announced his resignation, there were so many nice farewell parties for him, including the Sept. 12 blockbust at the Hyatt Regency Hotel attended by some 450 well-wishers that he quite enjoyed himself the last month and even threatened to postpone his resignation for more parties.

On his last Monday, in the best tradition of Archie, mehtabel and all the denizens of shibboleth alley, Marge Shimo (a staunch Democrat) and Betty Yumori (an equally staunch Republican) got together and threw us a little "Hard Times" party.

It was held in the large conference room of Kajima Associates where Marge's husband works, and in spite of the fact that all the guests had to sign in and sign out with the building's night security guard, we had a great time.

It was pot luck, naturally. Somehow, after putting in a full day's work, the women managed to come up with a spread that belied the official title of the party. Mike Horikawa, my boss, who can cook up a mean corn beef and cabbage in his "bachelor" digs at Bunker Hill Towers, brought a bottle of Chivas to sweeten the pot.

Highlight of the party was the opening of gifts designed to tide us over until the unemployment checks start to come. Thank heaven for friends. The Kunitzugu family, including our dog Arabella, will not starve for awhile nor want for other necessities of life, e.g., toilet paper.

We got cans of refried beans, corned beef, Tuna Helper, sardines and smoked oysters and of course Alpo for Arabella. Come to think of it, we might be sharing the Alpo, it's so expensive now.

Dave Miura, threw in a handsome fishing pole with a cardboard fish on it which we take to be an I.O.U. for some nice fresh sashimi the next time he goes fishing.

There was also a "Survival Kit," including among other items, ramen, instant tea and coffee, soy sauce, rice, miniature bottle of gin and sherry. We ended up singing Japanese songs and dancing the Taniko Bushi, much to the disgust of De Judge, Bob Takasugi, who hauled us over to the Kawafuku bar so he could sing "Besame Mucho" and "I Left My Heart in San Francisco" with lyrics by Bob Takasugi.

In the wee hours of the morning, De Judge also opined that "Kango may be unemployed, but he'll never be out of a job," or was it the other way around?

At the farewell luncheon by the CRA staff members, Deputy Administrator Dave Wilcox kidded Kango by saying that when he resigned from the CRA, they retired two tables at Restaurant Horikawa in his honor.

Since it was already the CRA Little Tokyo Project "summer White House," Restaurant Horikawa's suite of offices in the Kajima arcade will be where Kango will park his desk next, reorganizing the Horikawa management about three-quarters of the time. He will continue to help with the community aspects of redevelopment in an unofficial capacity.

REPARATIONS LONG OVERDUE

In 1770, the Earl of Shelburne wrote, "Reparation for our rights at home, and security against the like future violations."

The dictionary definition of "reparations" includes the making of amends, specifically the paying of compensation for some wrong or injury; damages paid by a nation or government for violations during war usually paid in money, labor, or goods.

On June 28, 1974 Los Angeles Congressman George E. Danielson introduced HR 15717, a bill to establish the Relocation Benefits Commission to provide assistance to citizens of the United States who were relocated under the authority of Executive Order 9066 (Feb. 19, 1942), and for other purposes. The Act is commonly referred to as the "Relocation Benefits Act."

Nishi Hongwanji bids for $650,000 for Belsuin Hall

LOS ANGELES — A multi-purpose hall seating 870 persons as an annex to the recently constructed $1.5-million Hampa Hongwanji here is being planned, it was announced Oct. 2 by Ritsun Ryuei Masuoka and Masashi Kawaguchi, fund drive committee chairman, as a $650,000 fund drive was launched.

The hall, to be located on the northside of the temple at Banning and Vignes, will include a Butouden similar to that of the Osaka Betsuin and Fresno Betsuin. Floor space will permit basketball games, public lectures, banquets, receptions and other programs. Portable folding tables and bleachers will be provided. A kitchen designed for catering service, basement area for storage, dressing and showers are included in the design by architect Tom Makino, who also designed the main temple structure, which has received wide acclaim for its architectural excellence.

A four-year plan on pledges has been projected with the drive expected to conclude by June, 1975. The main temple has been completely paid and with sale of its First & Central site to the city, the building phase will begin immediately. Completion in time for Nishi Hongwanji's 70th year celebration in 1995 was expressed.

TSBC expands

DENVER — Tri-State Buddhist Church, founded in 1919, and moved to its present site at 1947 Lawrence in 1947, will dedicate its newly remodeled and expanded facilities during the Oct. 19-20 program. The Rev. Kyoshiro Tokunaga of San Jose and Hiroji Kariya of Mountain View, BCA national president, will speak at the dedication service.

Teenager slain, suspect arrested

NEW YORK — Amy Iguchi, 16, was found stabbed to death Sept. 25 less than a mile from her home in Asharoken Village, Huntington, L.I. She was the daughter of the York Iguchis. Her father was a former assistant district attorney of Suffolk County.

Her fully-clothed body was found by police on the grounds of the Long Island Lighting Co. power plant at Eaton's Neck, three hours after her mother reported to police her daughter was missing. The high school sophomore usually returned home from school around 3 p.m.

Police held James Siena as suspect and was arraigned on a charge of 2nd degree murder on Sept. 30. He was emerging from a hospital where he had been treated for cuts on the hand, allegedly sustained during the attack on the girl. He had checked into the hospital about a half hour after Miss Iguchi was believed to have been killed.
