Nikkei Astronaut... Major Onizuka's flight into space delayed to July '84

HOUSTON—Major Ellison Onizuka, the first Asian American astronaut in the NASA program, will not go up this year. "It is a rushed decision," he said about the revocation of his Nov. 3 flight," the 37-year-old Hawaii-born Onizuka said. "We had been in training for our space mission for eight months, and our launch was eight weeks away when it was scrubbed," he told Asian Week on Oct. 14. He thinks the mission may be next July.

Onizuka entered the U.S. Air Force after graduating from ROTT at UC Berkeley in 1966 as a "distinguished military graduate," according to his NASA biography. He was selected as an astronaut candidate in January 1978, finished his training the following year, and was designated a specialist for shuttle missions.

With NASA's recent publicity touting women and minority astronaut candidates, this has sent a mixed message to him. "It's a real rarity there as they are in some other areas of the country," he said.

While waiting for a shuttle to outer space, Onizuka isn't just cooling his heels and hanging around Johnson Space Center. Aside from his normal Air Force duties, he is active in a number of professional and fraternal clubs and enjoys running, hunting, fishing, and playing racquetball.

Raising his two children, Darien and Janelle, with his wife, Loma, can absorb much of his off-duty time, too.

Record high 39% in Japan selects U.S. for 'closest ties'

TOKYO—The United States remains the most friendly country for Japanese, but more now want a status ofnds in their relations than closer ties, according to the results of an official opinion poll released Sept. 25.

The U.S. won support from a record high 36% of Japanese in the poll taken by the Prime Minister's Office last June, up 5% over the previous year. This apparently reflects growing friendship among Japanese toward Americans after Prime Minister Nakasone's U.S. visit last January despite Japa­nese hesitation toward strengthened defense coop­eration, diplomatic experts said.

The poll, which preceded the Soviet downing of a South Korean commercial airliner near Sakhalin by 3% of Japanese like the Soviets.

In the annual opinion poll on diplomacy, seventh in a series, 3,000 adults were inter­viewed, 1,500 in Japan, 400 in the U.S. and 300 in the U.S. country, and 2,317 (77%) of­fered effective responses.

When asked with which countries Japan should have the closest ties, the response was: U.S., 39%; China, 17%; Soviet Union, 3%. Eighty-two percent of the effective poll respondents who don't feel close to the Soviets, and the U.S. think Japan's classed relations between the two countries as "not good.

The survey showed a Korea is a rather remote country for Japanese, though geographically it stands very close—39% of the adults covered feel friendly and 0% do....

New York—A nine-volume encyclopedia about Japan written in English, which took more than 13 years and involved 1,300 scholars from 27 countries, was published by Kodansha on Oct. 20.

"I certainly never heard of another project like it," said Edwin O. Reischauer, former U.S. ambassador to Japan who served as chair of the 11-member U.S. advisory committee.

Judge Patel's courtroom is expected to receive it as "a means of implementing our policy to provide small businesses, minority populations, and encourage the reunification of families.

Promoting self-help programs for Asian refugees to eliminate social and economic dependency, and adopt procedures to encourage their speedy resettlement in the U.S. is "a matter of the utmost urgency, he said.

Noma, ironically, had been ousted for several years as head of Kodanista by the U.S. Occupation forces because of his company's cooperation with Japan's militarists prior to WWII.

The 8000 encyclopedia, consisting of almost four million words, would seem to have all the earmarks of a propaganda venture. Instead, Reischauer and others praise its objectivity.

Many of the 10,000 entries candidly discuss topics that have often been ignored or glossed over by Japanese, even among themselves, including Japan's prewar militarism, its aggression in China and Southeast Asia, the brickyards and kickbacks that led to the prosecution and conviction of former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, the ten­dency of Japanese to hold for­eigners in contempt as "bar­barious," and its mistreat­ment of its own racial-minority populations.

S.F. honors Hagiwara family

SAN FRANCISCO—George Hagiwara and Haruko Hagiwara Matushii, the two surviving members of the Hagiwara family who operated and lived in the Japanese Tea Garden from 1894 to 1942, were honored Sept. 30 by Supervisor Louise Renne. The ceremony in Renne’s office at City Hall honored the two grandchildren of Makoto Hagiwara, who agreed to build, landscape and maintain the garden in 1913 in exchange for $50 monthly rent to the City for a tea-and-fortune-cooking ceremony.

The agreement allowed the Hagiwaras family to build their home in the back of the tea garden where three generations of workers lived for 48 years. After the family was evicted by the recreation and park commission three days prior to the Army evacuation order in May 1942 their home was sold for salvage to a wrecking company.

Supervisor Renne authored legislation to include the Hagiwara in the reparation payments to San Francisco’s civil service workers of Japanese ancestry for loss of jobs during WWII. In presenting the $5,000 checks to Hagiwara and Matushii, Renne mentioned the symbolic gesture of regret for the treatment accorded the Hagiwara family and expressed the city’s gratitude for the legacy of the Japanese Tea Garden, which is enjoyed today by countless numbers of San Franciscans and visitors.

Renne presented proclamations by Mayor Diane Feinstein declaring Sept. 30, 1983, Hagiwara Family Day in San Francisco.

Jeff Mori, the first Japanese-American Recreation and Park Commission, Edward Shusser and Irene Casserry from the Recreation and Park Department, and David Nakayama, representing the National Japanese American Community League attended the event honoring the Hagiwara family.

Redress—Spreading the Word

By SUMI KOBAYASHI

New York

A workshop on “Redress—Spreading the Word” was led by Dr. Joane Yamauchi on Aug. 13 at the EDC/MDC Convention in New York. The workshop was designed to reach those who will be speaking to the general public about internment and redress. Attendees concentrated on delivery techniques rather than content.

Yamauchi first presented general advice on how to address an audience and then video-taped several “volunteers,” each of whom gave a short talk followed by a question and answer period.

Volunteer speakers were: Jack Osawa, Philadelphia; George Sakakibara, Livingston-Mercer; Ken Mayeda, Detroit; Sumi Kobayashi, Philadelphia; Ben Arai, New York; and Frank Sakamoto, Chicago.

The taped tapes were played back and stopped at strategic points as Yamauchi pointed out things that were right and things that could be improved for each speaker. Even experienced speakers benefited.

How to Deliver a Speech

Some of the points brought out in the critique were:

- Hands should always be visible (to show you are not hiding anything).
- The speaker should always be visible (if you are standing behind the rostrum).
- Use natural gestures (do not use gesturers, such as shaking a finger or hand, that could be interpreted as reprimanding the audience).
- Yamauchi noted that all speakers seemed more relaxed and gestured more in the question and answer period than during the formal part of their talks. Other advice included:
  - Tailor your talk to the audience.
  - Read the talk if you wish, but maintain eye contact, especially until the end of sentences.
  - Use visual aids; they are very effective.
  - When answering a question, repeat the question so that your audience can hear it, then answer.

Talent the Media

Earlier in the convention, a scheduled, informal workshop on redress was led by John Tateishi, JACL National Redress Director, with Min Yasui, National Redress Chair, present to provide guidance. The workshop was attended by representatives from EDC/MDC who have responsibility for redress in their associated areas.

The purpose was to prepare JACL members to educate the general public regarding the expansion and intent of the LDR program and to carry the CR(W) recommendations under way. Those who have already given talks said they have found a large measure of public ignorance about the subject.

Tateishi and Henry Tanaka, MDC Redress Chair, suggested that JACL members take the initiative in contacting media and not wait to react when contacted. The news media are always looking for story material.

Approaches that can be taken are:
Iwamasu: a fly-fishing art professor

Prof. Ken Iwamasu is a young Nisei artist who has been teaching at the University of Colorado and living in Denver for the past decade. I met him for the first time a few weeks ago. Iwamasu was born at Manzanar and grew up in the Los Angeles area.

His paintings and sculpture have been exhibited in many parts of the United States and Europe. Yet it may be possible that he is better known as a fly-fisherman, the people who delight in fooling trout into thinking a lure they've put together with feathers and hair and nylon thread is really something delicious.

As a boy Ken learned the delights of fishing from his father, Joe, and together with his brothers they'd drive into the Sierra to find challenging water. One reason Ken took the town of Boulder was its proximity to trout streams. Unlike most fishermen who are content simply to catch trout, Ken has made a science of fly-fishing. He studied entomology, which in his case is all about insect life in streams, the better to understand the feeding habits of trout.

The upshot is that he has an acquaintance with some 1,500 different kinds of insects, knows them by their scientific and common names, and has tied fishing lures that imitate them. Yet he hasn't killed a trout in years. The sport is in outwitting a wily trout, bringing it in and then reeling it so it will live to reproduce its kind and thus help improve fishing for everyone.

Iwamasu is a Nisei who is well known and has gained a certain eminence in his two fields of interest, art and fly-fishing. Yet, considering he was in these parts for more than ten years without my running across him, it seems likely that there are not many who know him in the national Japanese American community.

This is not surprising in view of the size and diversity of the community, and unlike the prewar years when opportunities were stringently limited, the vast variety of fields in which its members have become active. A single recent issue of People magazine offers an interesting sampling:

Grant Ujifusa, Wyoming-born Sansei and book editor, is co-author of the widely used handbook on policy, "Alcohol and American Politics," whose 1984 edition was introduced recently.

C apt. Gordon Ross Nakagawa, decorated Navy fighter pilot and former prisoner of war in Vietnam, was named commander of the Point Mugu Naval Air Station in California.

James Sano, a Yosemite park ranger, is leader of an 11-member team attempting to summit Mt. Everest.

Lt. Col. Melvin Hayashi, veteran of 350 missions in Vietnam, was appointed commandant of Edwards AFB Test Pilot School.

Earlier, we heard of Don Ida, world-class Denver balloonist, who died in an accident in Georgia. Then there's Al Hayashiki, who won two NCAA gymnastics championships a decade ago and was just inducted into the University of Washington Hall of Fame.

And soon we will be seeing television pictures of Astronaut Ellison Onizuka who is scheduled for a shuttle mission into space.

Most of these individuals are in highly visible positions. But for each one of them there must be numerous, and don't forget the women, who are distinguishing themselves quietly but significantly in endeavors Japanese Americans could never aspire to just short decades ago. Certainly the nation is better off for utilizing their abilities.

DENVER—County Judge Larry Lopez-Alexander sentenced an elderly Japanese (Sept. 9) to spend 10 days tending the grounds of the former Amache Relocation Center as “punishment” for a drunk driving conviction.

The judge decided on the alternative to jail after receiving a warning from Dr. Masafumi Nakakuri of Aurora Psychotherapy Associates, Ltd., who said the man might commit suicide for bringing disgrace to the family.

"He has punished himself enough. Hequit drinking and promised not to drive again,” Dr. Nakakuri said.
