WASHINGTON — Alaskan Aleuts described the damage suffered by their community as a result of government actions during WW2 before the same House subcommittee that heard testimony about Japanese American redress June 20, 21 and 27.

Unlike Japanese Americans, witnesses said, the Aleuts were moved from their homes because of the real possibility of a Japanese attack. After the Japanese took Attu and Kiska Islands in June 1942, the Aleut villages of St. Paul and St. George on the Pribilof Islands and on the Aleutian island chain west of Unimak Island were evacuated.

However, the evacuation of 881 Aleuts was done on very short notice; in many cases, villagers had to prepare to leave in a matter of hours and could only take what they could carry. The Aleuts were relocated to camps established by the Dept. of the Interior at abandoned fish canneries, an abandoned gold mine and an abandoned CCC camp.

Because of inadequate shelter, medical care, and sanitation facilities, over ten percent of the uprooted Aleuts, particularly the old and the very young, died in the camps. In their villages, which were occupied by military forces under the Alaska Defense Command, property was stolen and homes and buildings were ransacked.

Speaking before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations June 21, John Kirtland, a lawyer whose firm is representing the Aleuts, gave the background of the relocation and introduced five Aleut testifiers.

Philemon Tutiafkoff, chair of the Aleutian/Pribilof Islands Assn., was a teenager living in Unalaska when he was evacuated from his village. In his testimony, he said that the relocation was based upon legitimate military needs, but went on to say that "the government had a duty to provide reasonable care for the Aleuts under its control."

CWRIC Recommendations

Tutiafkoff agreed with the recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians regarding the Aleuts: (1) establishment of a trust fund; (2) per capita payments to each surviving evacuee; (3) restoration of village churches that were damaged or destroyed; (4) removal of WW2 debris from inhabited areas in the region; and (5) the return of Attu Island to the Aleuts (the island has remained under government control since WW2).

Agaton Krukoff, president of the Aleut Corp., spoke in detail about the Attu problem. The Aleut inhabitants of the island were captured by the Japanese in 1942 and taken to Hokkaido as prisoners. Those who survived, he said, "were not rehabilitated to their home island. Instead, they were involuntarily merged for the convenience of the Interior Department into the village of Atka."

Krukoff recommended an agreement whereby the island would be returned to the Aleuts, the Coast Guard could "continue essential functions" that it performs there today, and wildlife areas would be preserved.

Father Paul Merculia, a Russian Orthodox priest and chair of the Aleutian Housing Authority, described the damage done to churches after the evacuation and the loss of religious icons, many of which had been brought from Russia in the 19th century. "They were taken for souvenirs or destroyed by fire or weather damage," he said. He urged restoration or replacement of lost items.

The continuing presence of WW2 debris can be very dangerous, he continued. As recently as 1979, he said, "a young boy suffered serious injuries to both hands when he found an anti-tank mine detonator from WW2."

Lastly, he cited the loss of culture due to the deaths of elders who were unable to pass along their knowledge of skills and customs.

Loss of Possessions, Health

Representing Unalaska, Vincent Tutiafkoff rec-...

"Within one year 20 people out of 160 had died... a higher death rate existed at Ward Lake than at any other camp for the Aleuts." Emergency medical care did not come in time, he added, due to governmental neglect.

Ermutok also noted that little effort was made to protect Aleut property during their absence.

Today, Nikolaki is struggling to survive," he said in conclusion, "due to the recommendations of the Commission, if they are approved by Congress, will help us in saving Nikolaki from the continuing effects of the destruction of our homes and property, and from the reduction in our numbers at the camps."

The CWRC made its recommendations after holding hearings in Alaska in 1983. Two redress bills introduced in Congress last year by Reps. Mike Lowry (HR 3387) and Jim Wright (HR 4110) contain provisions for restitution to the Aleuts.

Rep. Don Young (R-Alaska) introduced HR 3422, which would provide remedies specifically for the Aleuts, in November 1983. Young testified before the subcommittee June 20. Written testimony from Alaska governor Bill Sheffield, who also supports payments, was also submitted.

"James Imahara: Son of Immigrants"

The personal recollection (as told to Anne Butler Pondexter) of a charter member of Florin JACL, Imahara and his young family of 10 were evacuated to Arkansas in 1942. They begrudgingly settled after the war in Los Angeles (Chicago was too cold, and to hell with California), where he successfully ran a nursery business and saw to it that nine of ten children finished college. One of the few first-person Nisei histories to be published, the fifth daughter encouraged her dad to write what had happened to him and the community, how he left and survived. "This little book may encourage other Nisei to tell the flipside of their evacuation story, the memories, thoughts, emotions and philosophy of life."—Harry Honda, Hard-cover, illus., 81 pp. $14 postpaid.

To Our Readers and Contributors

Some of you may have noticed that last week's Pacific Citizen was slightly different from previous issues. Articles were printed in two typefaces, instead of one, and the listing of community programs and events calendar were missing. This week's issue has been cut even further—temporarily—to eight pages from the usual two. This was not done to save costs, but rather to save space. Because the paper is smaller, coverage of general news and of JACL events could not be as complete as the staff wished. And those of you who have submitted columns and articles may still be waiting to see them in print.

There is a reason for these cutbacks: For nearly two weeks the typesetting machine has been out of commission. The PC's typesetting equipment is about six generations removed from that currently in use at most small outfits. Few mechanics in the country know how to repair it any more, and major parts must be shipped from New York. Superhuman efforts on the part of the staff—and the willingness of our printers, Midway Press, to do emergency typesetting—allowed the paper to get out on time. But the situation cannot continue. The equipment is working again, but it is on its last legs. Right now, PC cannot afford newer machinery. We have never been able to build up a reserve fund because of previous budgetary constraints in the JACL. In addition, the PC faces another major expense, when it must move to other quarters next year. The paper has long outgrown its one-room operation, but even at the present cramped location, rent will double in February of 1985. (The rent subsidy ends.)

So, unless the Pacific Citizen receives an infusion of funds, it will have to retreat where it should expand. The quality of the paper will begin to suffer noticeably. We are therefore asking you, our readers, to help us continue to improve the PC.

If every PC subscriber contributed only $2, there would be adequate funds to buy new typesetting equipment and to move to a space large enough for our staff.

Won't you help? All contributions—no matter how small—will be gratefully accepted. They're tax deductible, too. Contributors will be acknowledged in PC. Checks should be made payable to JACL and mailed to 244 S. San Pedro St., Rm. 506, Los Angeles, CA 90012.

Thank you!— Hank Sakai, Chair Pacific Citizen Board

Shimomura first to speak to ethnic coalition in 'breakthrough' forums

CHICAGO — JACL president Floyd Shimomura gave his views on Japanese American June 18 at the first in a series of city forums spotlighting the nation's ethnic and women's groups.

Sponsors of the gathering at Com Inn were the American Jewish Committee, Illinois Congress of Racial Equality, Woman's National Democratic Club and the Illinois Women's Democratic League.

Nurse dismissed during WW2 repaid by San Joaquin County

STOCKTON, Calif. — Edna Fujimoto Yabuno, who was forced to resign from her job as a nurse during World War II, was awarded $5,000 in a lawsuit against the county, a required payment under the Redress ordinance. Supervisors unanimously approved the payment without debate. Among those present were members of the group concerned with redress of employment rights of Japanese Americans, who were working for the county in 1942 because of their Japanese ancestry.

The Relocation of Canadian Nikkei

Like most Americans, Japanese Americans don’t know a great deal about their northern neighbors, Canada. This is true about Canada in general, but more particularly about Canadians of Japanese descent.

The knowledge doesn’t go much beyond awareness that Japanese Canadians were evacuated from their West Coast homes during World War II and that like their cousins in the U.S., they’ve made an admirable comeback from that traumatic experience.

But that is only the bare outline of an appalling story that makes the evacuation experience of Japanese Americans in comparison a Sunday school outing. The outline of that story is filled out by a recent book called “Nikkei Legacy,” by Toyo Takata and published by New Canada Publications of Toronto.

In photographs and text, it recounts the story of Canadians of Japanese ancestry from the time a stowaway named Manzo Nagano arrived in British Columbia in 1877. In many respects the early experience is similar to that of the Issei in the States. Japanese immigrants found work in frontier Canada as farmers, railroad workers and sawmill hands. In addition, large numbers fished for salmon or labored in the canneries.

The great majority of the Japanese immigrants remained there, but a number of them were interned in the sewage Powell Street area of Vancouver. Toyo Tanaka says there were some doughty characters among the pioneers including Yasukichi (Indian Yasu) Yoshida who with four other Japanese took off from Vancouver and rowed their little boat 400 nautical miles in 42 days to look for jobs as fishermen on the Skeena River.

Fishing links the EVIs to Canadian citizens. The Issei could become naturalized, but it was second-class citizenship without the right to vote. In World War I, more than 200 Issei volunteered for military service in hope of winning equal rights. Although Japan was an ally, British Columbia refused their services. The Japanese then went to the province of Alberta where they were enlisted. A total of 195 Issei and their Nisei went overseas. They made a terrible sacrifice: 54 of them were killed, 93 wounded. But the survivors did not win full citizenship rights until 1946.

Nisei in British Columbia were similarly discriminated against. In 1936 the newly organized Japanese Canadian Citizens League sent a delegation of four to Ottawa to seek the vote for Japanese Canadians. The mission was not successful. One of the delegates was Samuel I. Hayakawa, later to become U.S. senator from California. Another was a woman, Hide Hyodo.

With British Columbia’s long history of discrimination against Japanese Canadians, it was not unexpected that the attack on Pearl Harbor should result in drastic action against them. Government ineptness, callousness and insensitivity compounded the outrage. Many men were separated from their families and shipped to inland labor camps as though they were prisoners of war. They worked at road-building for 25 cents an hour, from which board was deducted. A thousand fishing boats owned by Japanese Canadians were seized, as were farms and motor vehicles, and later sold without notifying owners even though they had been told that a government custodian would look after their assets.

Women and children were herded into livestock barns at Hastings Park in Vancouver.

Some families left on their own to work in the harsh sugar beet fields of Alberta. About half the evacuees were sent to mining ghost towns in isolated Slocan Valley. If there were no barbed wire fences as in U.S. camps, there was also no place for the evacuees to go. Facilities were primitive. Many Nisei had to build houses families who were expected to do their own cooking. There was a privy at the rear for each three cabins.

Meanwhile, British Columbia politicians were calling for total and permanent banishment of Japanese Canadians. Little wonder, then, that when the people in the camps were given a choice of being forced to leave and settle elsewhere in Canada or accept deportation to Japan, more than 10,000 of the 21,000 uprooted opted for Japan.

War’s end caused many to change their minds, but 4,000 (including many dependent children) ultimately left. Many have since returned to Canada. But for the others, the road back was long and difficult. Japanese Canadians were not permitted to go back to the West Coast of their own country until 1949, three and a half years after the end of hostilities, even though they could cross the border freely and visit Seattle, San Francisco or Los Angeles. They were not given the right to vote until 1948.

Early in World War II Nisei registered for military service but were never drafted in British Columbia, although a few slipped through bureaucratic cracks and went into service. At the urging of Great Britain, Canada reluctantly enlisted Nisei as linguists and about 200 were in uniform when the war ended. Only one Canadian Nisei died in combat. He was Morgan Tanaka of Saskatchewan, a nephew of Tokio Slocum, World War I hero of U.S. military service. Saskatchewan named a lake in Tanaka’s memory.

Toronto, not Vancouver, today is the center of Japanese Canadian population and activity. Like Japanese Americans, they have become integrated and have claimed their rightful place in the life of the nation. As Takata writes, “No other community of Canadians faced a greater challenge — and endured. Indeed, they triumphed.”

Indeed, they triumphed and earned the respect and admiration of their countrymen as well as Japanese Americans. We’re indebted to Toyo Tanaka, former English editor of the New Canadian and former president of the Japanese Cultural Centre in Toronto, for telling the story of his people in a stirring and, in view of the facts, remarkably restrained manner.

Greetings from Hawaii

By Edgar Hamamatsu, 1984 Convention Chair

Our dear JACL friends in the Mainland:

We extend to you our gentle and warm aloha. During the upcoming convention, we feel very proud and honored to be able to share our love and friendship with you, and to join you in delving into some of our common problems.

"Ko ya na go to hii — indeed, the days fly by like the speed of an arrow. It is already one month until Convention time. As our okeku samu, we, in the Hawaii Hotel and Hawaiian Adventure, would like to lay out our "red carpet" for all of you. You are our precious guests.

The time flies by so swiftly. We are currently celebrating our 25th (Silver Jubilee) Anniversary of Statehood. Some 25 years ago, we proudly exclaimed, "No more second-class citizenship, and no more taxation without representation." Today, we come to realize that it requires constant vigilance to preserve the erosion of our cherished citizenship rights.

We extend our cordial hospitality to you and we do, in earnest, want to show you a good time while putting our heads together on some serious questions. Till then, our fondest ALOHA.

Operating within the Budget
The approach of the national convention heightens the awareness of such matters as the national JACL budget. The opinion audit that will be released shortly has good news. It reinforces the fiscal operation and status of the organization. The report indicates that our operations are consistent with good practice, and, more importantly, it underscores the improvement of position, meaning that the requirement to borrow funds in order to operate is no more.

While I am personally pleased with being able to have the audit confirm efforts to address our financial situation, I was reminded not to point out some of the significant factors from several years back that assured this. At the height of our financial distress, the organization was fortunate to have a combination of individuals serving as national president and national treasurer which helped us to improve our position. Treasurers George Kodama and Hank Sakai provided restraints on spending that were required for that time. The job of national treasurer is unpopular in that the role requires a great deal of negative response. The program side of the organization, reasonably and understandably, wants funds to operate. The wide varity of programs, constituencies and interests repre-

"...someone has to be the bad guy and point out that there are limits to our resources."

"...you have to do yourself and do the rest of the organization get healthy. He said no to him if for the k of the..."

"...the California Highway Patrol is offering a career opportunity for men and women as State Traffic Officers. If you're between 20 and 31 years of age and have at least a high school diploma or the equivalent, you'll find what we have to offer very rewarding. For example:"

- A starting salary of $1,766 per month during the 21-week Academy training period.
- A uniform allowance of $350 per year.
- Two weeks vacation per year with increases to four weeks.
- Health and life insurance, dental coverage, and an outstanding retirement plan.
- And a thorough legal background training that's hard to find outside of law school.

So if you're athletic, like working outdoors, and want a career with advancement opportunities, there's a lot to like about the California Highway Patrol. Just fill out the coupon below. Or contact your nearest CHP office. Minorities and women are encouraged to apply.
Himeno seeks 2d term as v.p. for planning

LOS ANGELES—Miki Himeno, national JACL vice president for planning and development since 1982, faces no challenger in her reelection bid. During this biennium, Himeno, board member of the Japanese American Aging and Retirement Center, senior staff member at the Los Angeles Times, and former member of the Los Angeles Board of Education, is running for a second term as vice president for planning.

In her long-range goal is to promote the purposes of JACL as set forth in the constitution. She describes those goals as: "(1) to protect the rights of Japanese Americans in the quest for justice for all people; (2) to seek a balance in the American in us as well as our historical heritage; (3) to encourage programs on all levels relevant to today's issues, and (4) to uphold the U.S. Constitution and to encourage active participation in citizenship and leadership in the communities around us." Himeno has been involved in the Monterey Park/Alhambra area community in such capacities as trustee and president of the Monterey Park Brugey Memorial Library, member and officer of the League of Women Voters, and administrator, volunteer coordinator at Alhambra High School, and Alhambra school board member.

among the Nikkei, that would not have justified incarcereation the entire population. The 19 people tried and convicted of espionage for Japan, he added, were all Caucasians. "That surely would not be sufficient grounds to lock up all persons of German or English background," he said.

"Another Special Interest Group"

Ken Masugi, a resident fellow at the Claremont Institute for the Study of Statesmanship and Political Philosophy, accused the CWRIC of "extraordinary arrogance to use the standards... of the 1960s in evaluating what happened... in the 1940s."

Masugi, who gave similar testimony before a Senate subcommittee last year, said that the CWRIC did not place itself in the position of policymakers on December 7, 1941, "in both terms of their wartime responsibilities and the prevailing attitudes concerning race and ethnicity."

Attacking the provisions of HR 1110, one of the redress bills under consideration, Masugi said that payments "would justifiably be seen as the result of political cunning and not as a retribution for an injustice."

The fact that the board of directors of the bill's proposed fund would be mostly Nikkei, he said, constitutes "discrimination on the basis of ethnicity" and is "clearly unconstitutional."

"It is clear that this fund would create a means of opening the public fund to all ethnic groups who assumed duties during the war," he said.

Masugi suggested a monument to soldier of all ethnic groups "in the spirit of cooperation and friendship that existed during the war." He called the fund "a means of opening the public fund to all ethnic groups who assumed duties during the war." He called the fund "a means of opening the public fund to all ethnic groups who assumed duties during the war."

Another group that would benefit from the fund, he said, is "the group of Nikkei who were born in the United States and who had family members who were incarcerated during the war."

He said that the fund would "be a means of opening the public fund to all ethnic groups who assumed duties during the war." He called the fund "a means of opening the public fund to all ethnic groups who assumed duties during the war."
