Midwest community rallies behind Chinese victim

by Helen Zia

DETROIT—Kiet Tien, a 20-year-old ethnic Chinese from Vietnam, moved to the U.S. with his brothers, grandfather and other family members through a refugee assistance program four years ago. They settled in Grand Ledge, Mich., a semi-rural town of 7,000 located about eight miles from Lansing. Off and on for the last four years, Kiet Tien has been harassed, and in December the harassment turned to violence.

On Jan. 2, four white men were arraigned for attempting to break into the Tien home with intent to commit murder the day before. The four—Robert Schrauben, 18, Rick Wallace, 18, Jerry Wilson, 18, and Michael Osborne, 19—were freed on bond, and preliminary hearings began Jan. 10.

Knock at the Door

At the hearings, Tien's wife Christina, a Caucasian and a native of Grand Ledge, testified that at about 11 p.m. on Jan. 1 she answered a knock on the door. Schrauben, accompanied by the other three, was at the door wielding a hunting knife. When Mrs. Tien asked what they wanted, Schrauben reportedly replied, "I just want to talk to your Chinese husband and any other chinks you have in there."

While Mrs. Tien went to call the police, the men began pounding on the door with their knives and breaking windows. Local police arrived within minutes. As they subdued the four, some allegedly yelled, "Why are you protecting them? Ship 'em in a boat and send them back to China where they came from."

Neighbors who knew the Tien reported that this was not the first such incident for Kiet Tien. "He's been harassed by four or five young men...saying things like he's taking their jobs and why doesn't he go back where he came from," said Betty Miller, who sponsored the Tien family's move to the U.S.

As a result of these violent encounters, Tien, a quiet man who speaks in halting English, has quit

New redress bill attracts 100 sponsors

WASHINGTON — Ninety-nine members of Congress have signed on as co-sponsors of redress bill HR 442, also known as the Civil Liberties Act of 1985. The bill was introduced to the House of Representatives Jan. 3 by Rep. Jim Wright (D-Tex.), who introduced redress bill HR 4110 in 1983.

The new bill, named in honor of the all-Nisei 442nd Regimental Combat Team, is essentially the same as HR 4110. One provision of HR 4110 that was dropped from the present bill is the requirement that five of the nine members of the proposed Civil Liberties Public Education Trust Fund be Japanese Americans. Some members of Congress had considered the requirement discriminatory.

by Robert Shimabukuro

The refurbished Toyota-General Motors plant in Fremont, Calif., sent its first Nova off the assembly line last month, and industry, labor and management experts are watching the experiment with great interest. In an era of sometimes disquieting envy of Japanese industry by American corporations and animosity toward Japanese products by American labor unions, the Fremont plant is a cautious ménage à trois of two of the world's largest manufacturing concerns and the once-powerful United Auto Workers (UAW).

Unlike the Honda plant in Ohio and the Nissan plant in Tennessee, the NUMMI (New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc.) plant in Fremont is comprised of union members, a large number of them rehired from the old Fremont GM plant. Because of that, the UAW has as much at stake as GM and Toyota.

In February 1983, when GM-Toyota announced the formation of NUMMI, then-UAW president Douglas Fraser said that, based on his discussions with GM chairman Roger Smith, the UAW had "every reason to believe the UAW will continue to be the bargaining agent at the plant." But when Toyota chairman Eiji Toyoda announced in Tokyo that laid-off UAW workers would not be given priority when hiring was done at the Fremont plant, relations soured. Because union activists were not hired at Nissan and Honda, the UAW members were very skeptical about who was going to work for NUMMI.

Skepticism Countered

Toyota officials were skeptical also. The GM Fremont plant had a high absenteeism rate, low morale, drug and alcohol abuse, and union-management friction. But intense pressure, meetings, discussions with high-level officials, and reassurances from Fremont City Councilman Yoshio Fujiwara about the abilities and habits of American workers, resulted in NUMMI recognizing the UAW; presently, 90% of the work force is from the pool of ex-GM workers. According to UAW members, their job is to show that American workers can produce a quality car and that the problems of the GM Fremont plant were due in most part to GM management.

Management Techniques

NUMMI is incorporating Japanese management techniques that appear to be meeting with the approval of the workers. Time clocks are gone, and so are private offices. Executives fight for parking space along with assembly-line workers, and everyone eats in the same cafeteria. Group leaders, team leaders, and team members talk about teamwork, mutual trust, cooperation, and quality over early morning calisthenics.

Rather than the specialized, one-man-one-job process emphasized in the U.S., NUMMI will operate within the flexible Japanese system in which a worker performs more than one function,

News in Brief

Government response to Hirabayashi due

SEATTLE—The U.S. Dept. of Justice is expected to file its pretrial order in response to Gordon Hirabayashi's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, filed in January 1983. Hirabayashi, whose conviction for violating military curfew and "evacuation" orders was upheld by the Supreme Court, charged that the government suppressed, altered and destroyed evidence attesting to the loyalty of Japanese Americans during WW2.

U.S. District Court Judge John Voorhees heard the petition in May 1984 and agreed that he should conduct an evidentiary hearing, or trial, on the matter. The government's pretrial order, due today, must indicate the issues, documents, and witnesses it plans to use in its case against Hirabayashi.

Veterans help rebuild torched Buddhist temple

HAWLEY, Mass.—After three angry Vietnam war veterans burned down a Buddhist temple New Year's Eve 1984, other veterans from around the country helped to rebuild it. A new, larger temple is now ready for the congregation of the Mahasiddha Nyingapa Center.

The men said they burned the shrine to protest the lack of services available for Vietnam veterans. The congregation of the temple is nearly all white.

Hiring of Southeast Asian protested

PORTLAND, Ore.—The director of the Willamette National Cemetery reinstituted a work experience program with Portland Community College after cancelling it when a local veterans group objected to the hiring of a Vietnamese student. An employee of the cemetery had instigated the protests.

Paul Bannai, director of the Veterans Administration's Dept. of Memorial Affairs, which oversees the national cemetery system, has backed the Willamette director.

Elected official says he didn't intend slur

BOISE, Idaho—State Sen. Walter H. Yarbrough (R-Grand View) said he "didn't mean it as degrading" when he referred to Japanese as "slant-eyes."

Yarbrough, who is beginning his 11th term, made the remark during a hearing of the Idaho Legislature's revenue projection committee Jan. 4, when it discussed ways to improve markets for Idaho agricultural products in the Pacific.

Speaking as a cattle rancher, Yarbrough said beef producers have run into difficulty trying to sell to the Japanese. "When you start dealing with those slant-eyes, you'd better be pretty sharp," he said.

Later that day, Yarbrough declared, "All the Japanese are my good friends," and noted that Japanese Americans, the most unpopular ethnic group in the U.S. during WW2, have since become among the nation's most respected citizens.

The slur prompted Pocatello Blackfoot JACL president Kunio Yamada to write Yarbrough a letter which read, in part: "Your derogatory remark is an affront to Japanese everywhere, including those Japanese Americans with whom you claim friendship...."

Asians encountering Black hostility

by Hiroshi Uyehara

PHILADELPHIA—Four hearings were conducted by the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations from Oct. 27 to Nov. 5 to investigate incidents of violence against Asian refugees and immigrants. The hearings were a result of Councilwoman Joan Specter's prodding of the city council's inaction in the face of increasing violence against Asians in West Philadelphia and the Logan section of the city. Mayor Wilson Goode's response was to tour the troubled West Powelton area and declare that the attacks on Asians were not racially motivated.

It was against this background that Reiko Gaspar testified for JACL and recounted her personal experiences of racism at the last hearing. After her testimony she was asked about racial slurs and she responded in a loud clear voice that she had been taunted, "Chink, Chink, Gook! Can you see through those slits?" as she walked through the halls of the University City High School. As a public school teacher for many years who had worked with Black students, she has encountered similar hostility and sensed increasing racism. There was no doubt in her testimony that the slurs were racially motivated.

During the past year a Vietnamese student was beaten and his neck broken and, recently, a Hmong visiting in West Philadelphia was savagely beaten with both legs broken and surgical repair of his skull needed. The Hmong did not report attacks, robberies, extortion, and even rape to the police because of fear of retaliation. The police say that they have not received any such reports. The Hmong response is to gather their extended families

Congress demands action on Liu case

WASHINGTON—The murder of Chinese American journalist Henry Liu, already the subject of investigations by Daly City (Calif.) police and the FBI, is beginning to draw attention in Congress because of the recent implication of Taiwan government officials in the killing.

Rep. Norman Mineta (D-San Jose) has sharply criticized the Reagan Administration's response to the case. "How can Chinese Americans feel safe when the President remains silent on this terrorism and the State Dept. has to be dragged kicking and screaming into the investigation of this case?" he asked.

"Americans of Chinese ancestry should not have to demand that the President condemn this attack, or that the Justice Dept. will vigorously prosecute this case, or that the State Dept. will press for full cooperation from the Taiwanese government. The President should demand that the Taiwanese government return the two suspects in Mr. Liu's killing immediately, if only to assure us as U.S. citizens that Taiwan will not become a sanctuary for terrorists."

Rep. Tom Lantos (D-San Mateo) has called for a congressional inquiry. "The involvement of officials of a foreign government in such acts is reprehensible and requires immediate and forceful action on the part of our government," he wrote in a letter to Rep. Stephen J. Solarz (D-N.Y.), chair of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs.

Solarz announced Jan. 18 that he planned to hold hearings on whether the killing violated a 1982 law prohibiting harassment of American citizens by foreign governments. Under the law, written by Solarz, arms sales to a country found to have engaged in such conduct would be banned.

Critical of KMT

Liu, who immigrated to the U.S. from Taiwan 17 years ago, was known to readers of the Chinese language press in the U.S. and Hong Kong for his articles and books criticizing Taiwan's ruling Nationalist Party (Kuomintang) and President Chiang Ching-kuo. After he was gunned down at his Daly City home Oct. 15, his widow and others in the Chinese American community charged that the killing had been ordered by the Taiwan government.

The controversy over Liu's death is similar to that which surrounded the case of Chen Wen-chen in 1982. Chen, a professor at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, was found dead on a Taipei college campus after being interrogated by security police. Government officials declared that Chen, a critic of the Kuomintang, had committed suicide, but associates of Chen believed that he had been murdered.

When Chen Chi-li, Wu Tun and Tung Kuei-sen, all reputed members of the Taiwan-based Bamboo gang, were identified by the FBI as suspects in the Liu case, they

Arizona to put on 3-month Japanese exposition

PHOENIX—"Behind the Mask: A Cultural Exposition of Japan," a 3-month exposition designed to provide a well-integrated approach to understanding Japan, gets under way on Feb. 2 and 3 with "Matsuri."

The Matsuri, offering exhibits, performances, and items for sale at Heritage Square and the Lath House, is open to the public between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. each day. Scattered around the square will be exhibits of bonsai trees, koi, ikebana, dolls, origami, calligraphy and Japanese swords. Demonstrations include dance, martial arts, music and a special kimono fashion show. The festival also includes a variety of items on sale to the public, including food, handicrafts, kites and novelties.

Utilizing over 10 different locations during the next three months, "Behind the Mask" presents a series of lectures, demonstrations, and exhibits on a wide variety of subjects, including Japanese literature, history, music, religion, philosophy, politics, crafts and arts, both traditional and modern.

A panel discussion on the Japanese American experiences in the Valley is scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 7, 7:30 p.m. at the ASU Memorial Union Pinal Room.

In addition, exhibits of Japanese pottery, photography, prints, and Kabuki images are scheduled. Performances include Yuriko Doi's Theater of Yugen from Portola Valley, Calif., on April 3, and Kabuki West from Pomona College in Claremont, Calif., on April 14.

A Japanese film series with discussions following is also scheduled. "The Men Who Tread on the Tiger's Tail" (Akira Kurosawa) is set for Feb. 6; "Double Suicide" (Masahiro Shinoda) for Feb. 13; and "The Ballad of Narayama" (Shohei Imamura) for Feb. 19.

"Mask" director Jean Micuda said that the Valley has a Japanese American population of about 5,000 and the project will recognize the contributions of these residents—many of whom came to the area during the internment years.

Participating groups include Arizona State Univ., the Bonsai Society, JACL, Japan America Society, Phoenix-Himeji Sister City, Phoenix Koi Club and Ikebana of Arizona.

Sponsors are ASU Centennial Commission; the Phoenix Parks, Recreation and Library Dept.; Arizona Humanities Council; Arizona Commission on the Arts; Consulate General of Japan in Los Angeles; Mitsui and Company (USA) Inc.; and NKK Switches of America, Inc.

Valley residents are asked to contact Dennis Petty, 965-1985, for information about the Matsuri, and to call 965-6911 for information about the "Behind the Mask" series.

Asian performing arts series opens

On Jan. 31 and Feb. 1, Kodo, the breath-taking taiko drummers from Sado Island, Japan, are back by popular demand after playing to sold-out audiences during the Olympic Arts Festival. Once again, they bring their 900-pound o-daiko drum.

For dance enthusiasts, Satoru Shimazaki presents a solo tribute to Michio Ito, one of the true pioneers of American modern dance who taught such dance luminaries as Martha Graham and Lester Horton. In his Los Angeles debut on Feb. 16, award-winning cho-

Woo to try for city seat

LOS ANGELES—Mike Woo formally announced his candidacy for the Los Angeles City Council Jan. 14 at his campaign headquarters. The council race for the 13th District will be a rematch with Councilwoman Peggy Stevenson, who defeated Woo by two percentage points in a primary held four years ago.

Woo, 33, is a senior consultant to State Senator David Roberti and a member of various community organizations, including Leadership Education for Asian Pacifics (LEAP), Pacific Asian American Roundtable, and the Asian Pacific Caucus of the Democratic Party. If elected, he will be L.A.'s first Asian American city councilman.

The 13th District includes Echo Park, Hollywood, Los Feliz, and Silver Lake. Woo, whose plans include the redevelopment of Hollywood and the preservation of Griffith Park, said that incumbent Stevenson "has lost touch with the people" and "is too close to special interests."

WE'VE WRITTEN BEFORE how we make a bee-line for Japanese movie houses whenever we're in San Francisco or Los Angeles. The fantasy nurtured since boyhood days of watching chambara, when a stoic swordsman of few words—ala Gary Cooper or John Wayne—flashed his toh in the name of righteousness and honor, still clings to us. But residing in these parts on the East Coast, where Japanese movies are available only years apart in one of the local "art" theaters, and where the New York stations are just far enough away that our rooftop aerial cannot pick up the signals on Sundays, when some station up in the Big Apple beams Japanese programs—well, it's somewhat like living in a fast-food hamburger joint and seldom seeing chazuke-n-koko.

SPEAKING OF SWORDSMANSHIP, I'm reminded of the story of the champion U.S. Olympic fencer who had heard so much about the samurai swordsmanship of Japan that he travelled to Japan to see a demonstration by their three top swordsmen. The third-ranking Japanese champion stepped forward; a teacup upside down on the table was lifted, whereupon a fly emerged and flew up. No. 3 drew his sword, slashed the air, and the fly fluttered to the ground in two pieces. No. 2 then stepped forward, the second cup lifted, upward went a fly—and the sword flashed twice—and the fly dropped in four pieces. Thereupon, the top-ranking swordsman approached, the third cup was raised, a fly buzzed out and ichi-ban swished the air with his sword. But the fly kept flying around. Puzzled, the Olympian queried: "No. 3 cut his fly in half; No. 2 cut his into quarters; yet your fly is still buzzing in the air." Whereupon ichi-ban turned to the Olympian and observed: "Hai, but that one mate no more."

Okay, so let me get back to the subject of jidai-geki on terebi ("period movies on television").

ON THE SUBJECT of jidai-geki, I've experienced one of those "good news, bad news" phases. The good news is that frau Vicki also enjoys these period movies and she stumbled across a place some 40 miles away which stocks VCR tapes of Japanese movies. So now she rents up to three or four at a time, and after dinner we'll sit down and enjoy a good ol' katsudo-shashin. The bad news part is that since I don't understand everything that's being said (and she does), I keep asking for an explanation. Which can be mighty exasperating to her. While she's patiently explaining to me, both of us miss what is then being projected, so we both miss parts of the movie. If any of you have been to a theater where some yokel nearby keeps talking during the movie, you'll get an idea of what Vicki has to go through. In fact, worse: in her case, that yokel is sitting right by her ear.

A FEW YEARS ago, Vicki had a supply of tapes taken from Japanese television shipped from Japan. Eagerly, the layers of wrappings were peeled back, and we placed the first cassette on our Panasonic player—only to get squiggly lines and unintelligible garble. Chagrined, we had the player checked; it was o.k. We then had the tapes checked, and none of them played except on an expensive Mitsubishi or Hitachi player. And there we were: stuck with two shipments of programs and a player that would not accept them. We broke down and bought the Hitachi. We gave away the Panasonic.

The most expensive jidai-geki's I've ever seen, I'll tell you.

FREMONT

a concession from UAW. It should reduce boredom and make it easier to change job assignments. Workers are urged to make "creative suggestions"; morning calisthenics are voluntary, however.

Structure of NUMMI

Basically, Toyota and the UAW will produce the cars, and Chevrolet will market them. Of the $250 million invested in the re-opening, GM invested $20 million plus the site. Toyota supplied the rest. Nova is a subcompact, front-wheel-drive auto similar to the Toyota Corolla. The drive train (transmission and engine) is Japanese; the other parts, American made. The top management is hired by Toyota, and the production is by Toyota. The board of directors is one-half Toyota, one-half GM.

Objections Voiced

Objections to this joint venture have come from Chrysler and Ford, both charging that the deal violates anti-trust laws. Chrysler has a suit pending.

Others argue that the plant does little to boost the ailing American heavy industries. Because the drive train is built in Japan, some critics contend that very little is being done to build up the industrial base that the U.S. sorely needs. Americans will be assembling parts machined overseas, so the argument goes.

But a plant expected to account for only 2% of the total automobile sales in the United States cannot be expected to change the industrial base in the U.S. What the critics are nervous about are the trends in the American automobile industry. Already, Mazda has announced that it will open a plant at an abandoned Ford plant in Flat Rock, Michigan, just outside of Detroit. Some of the cars will be marketed through Ford.

And like NUMMI, Mazda has decided to hire union workers. Said Kazuhiko Hoshino, one of Mazda's managing directors, the decision to recognize the UAW came after "frank discussions" with UAW executives.

Mitsubishi Joins the Parade

And last month, it was announced that Mitsubishi Motors will also open a plant in the Midwest, probably in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, or Kentucky. According to Toyoo Tate, president of Mitsubishi Motors Corp., MMC would not operate the plant alone, but declined comment on the possibility of joining hands with Chrysler. At present, Mitsubishi manufactures the Colt and a few other cars for Chrysler.

Harvard economist Robert Reich, writing in the Feb. 27, 1984 issue of the New Republic, states:

The overall strategy is clear. It is the same strategy that underlies Japan's recent, rapid shift into aircraft engines, video cassette recorders, telecommunications devices, and personal computers. These products are launching pads for gaining scale and experience in the world's newest technologies. Attaining immediate profits from these products is less important than becoming the largest and most experienced world practitioners of the advanced methods which lay behind them. A Japanese labor force so attuned will easily come to dominate the highest-valued portions of any global industry. There is nothing sinister about this; consumers all over the world continue to benefit from Japan's advances... Viewed in this light, the Japanese automobile strategy is part of an overall national strategy by which the Japanese will become the design engineers for the world.

In the same way that the American consumer electronics industry has given up competing with the Japanese, the automobile industry is about to do the same.

Toyota Objectives

It must be remembered that Toyota will not have much to gain economically from this venture. While GM shares one-half the profits for $20 million invested (normally, a new model costs $100-200 million to produce), Toyota objectives may be more subtle. Sankei Shimbun deputy foreign news editor Jun Kusano claims that Toyota's objectives are more strategic than economic. Quoting a Toyota source, Kusano says that reviving a GM factory may soften protectionist sentiment in the United States. Also, by marketing the car through Chevrolet, Toyota expects to help "blunt opposition to Japanese auto imports." In addition, Toyota's investment now will pay off in a work force of engineers and designers better able to innovate in the future.

NUMMI will test how well unionized workers perform under the Japanese management system; it will also be testing how adaptive that system is, for there are signs that it needs some attention.

'Lifetime Employment a Myth'

Management books have earlier suggested that Japan's system of lifetime employment, company trade unions, company loyalty, seniority-based wages together with a workaholic work force has produced the Japanese "miracle." Some analysts, like Prakesh Sethi, Nobuaki Namiki, and Carl Swanson, in their book, "The False Promise of the Japanese Miracle," suggest that the Japanese success has been achieved at "enormous cost to the Japanese people and their environment." They charge that the system blatantly discriminates against

New Typesetter Is Here!

Three boxes airshipped from New York have occupied one corner of the PC office since early December, having come during the Holiday Issue blitz. This past week, a technician from Allied Linotype came to uncrate and hook up the CRTonic 200 digital typesetter and the Diablo 630 printer—the items being purchased from the PC typesetter fund.

This week (Jan. 21-25), two PC staffers are attending classes to learn how to operate the new equipment. One more attachment—a communication interface board—is to be inserted, enabling the typesetter to accept data from other word processors in-house or by modem from the outside.

The first half of the campaign to attain $40,000 has been attained, with $21,000 received since the fund drive was started in July 1984. The completion of the second half of the campaign within the next few months will be one of the happiest accomplishments in PC's 55-year history. The staff thanks everyone who has already contributed and those who are about to. —HKH.

Labeling Ourselves

Back in the Thirties, when Jimmie Sakamoto was publishing the weekly Japanese American Courier in Seattle, the word "Nisei" was a no-no. Sakamoto reasoned that he was running an English language newspaper and "Nisei" had no place in it since it was a foreign word.

At least that's the way we who worked on the Courier interpreted his rule. In the Courier's stories Nisei were identified as "second generation." That was awkward but the writers could live with it. But "second generation" was even more awkward in headlines. It simply wouldn't fit. So in many instances Nisei were identified in headlines as "youth." That was accurate, all right, since Nisei in those times certainly were young. But it was a stilted use of the word and no one was happy with it. Still, we couldn't find a better word. We were stuck with "youth."

Since those days "Nisei" has become an accepted part of the English language. It appears in my Webster's Third New International: "(Jap, lit., second generation, fr. ni second + sei generation): a son or daughter of issei parents who is born and educated in America and esp. in the U.S.—

distinguished from kibei, compare sansei."

But just about the time "Nisei" became accepted, they are vanishing from the American scene. Sansei, Yonsei and Gosei are taking over. In the sense that Nisei means Japanese Americans, the word has been applied to later generations. But it is understandable that Sansei, Yonsei, et al consider the term inaccurate. I also gather that many prefer not to be confused with a generation which they regard without great admiration.

Some of the Japanese American press, including Pacific Citizen, have adopted the term "Nikkei" to apply to Japanese Americans. Sound okay? Well, aside from its unfamiliarity, there are more basic objections which have been voiced by Glen S. Fukushima, a graduate of Gardena High School, Stanford and Harvard Law School, a Fulbright Fellow at the University of Tokyo, and now an attorney in Los Angeles (See Jan. 18 PC).

"Whereas 'Japanese American' denotes 'American citizen of Japanese ancestry', Fukushima writes, 'Nikkei' merely denotes 'related to Japan' or 'of Japanese ancestry'. Clearly, much is lost by using the latter term. I seriously question whether this emphasis of ethnicity over citizenship is in the best interest of Japanese Americans—either for our future or for properly understanding our role in American history.

"Nikkei is never used as a noun in Japanese to refer to an American of Japanese ancestry. The proper term is 'Nikkei Amerika-jin'.... In fact, using Nikkei in Japanese can be confusing because the term encompasses anything outside of Japan related to Japan. Thus 'Nikkei kigyo' is routinely used to mean Japanese-owned companies operating abroad. Similarly 'Nikkei bijunesman' more often refers to Japanese nationals than to Japanese Americans. The word 'Nikkeijin' is used as a noun, but this too when used alone is ambiguous inasmuch as it makes ethnicity rather than citizenship its defining characteristic."

An impressive explanation. Obviously 'Nikkei' as used by the Japanese American press is an inaccurate use of the term. But is there a better one that's accurate, understandable and acceptable?

by Jin Konomi

One autumn day the lord of Matsuyue went on a horseback excursion into the suburbs (of Edo). After many miles of unconfined galloping and cantering in the wide open country he was beginning to feel hungry when, as he passed a farmhouse, he smelled a most tantalizing odor. On a sudden impulse he entered the yard.

Behind the house by the kitchen door, he saw a woman squatting before a shirichirin (portable charcoal brazier). Some fish were broiling on the grill, and thick, blue smoke rose from the fire. The tantalizing odor filled the air. He summoned his attendants, who had been following him at a respectful distance. He told a page to order the woman to serve him luncheon, with the wonderful smelling fish.

The woman balked at first at such an outrageous demand, for she was nobody's servant, certainly not of the stranger making the demand. After much cajoling by the page she was finally persuaded. She set his lordship on the kitchen verandah and served him an impromptu luncheon of fresh cooked rice and the fish hot off the grill. It was the most delicious meal his lordship had ever had in his life.

After thanking and rewarding the woman (not personally, of course) he rode on. He learned the fish was called samma, and the place he had this heavenly repast was Meguro.

Shortly thereafter his lordship met his friend, lord of Kokura, in the Edo Castle, where he was in attendance on the shogun as required by protocol. He could hardly contain himself in his eagerness to talk about his gourmet adventure. He waxed euphoric as he drooled over the memory of the most delicious samma of Meguro. Lord Kokura swallowed the story whole. He was angry that such a delicacy had been denied him. So as soon as he went home he had his steward issue an order to the cook to serve him samma as soon as possible.

The cook was in a quandary. Samma was one of the lowliest fishes, deemed totally unsuitable to serve to such an exalted personage as his lordship. As he had never handled it, he did not know what to do. So he proceeded in his usual haute cuisine manner. First he steamed the samma to remove the oil; then he had his helper pull out all the fine bones, one by one, with tweezers; then he marinated and broiled it.

Lord Kokura was sadly disappointed. The samma was even flatter than the other fishes to which he was daily accustomed.

At the next palace attendance, Lord Kokura told Lord Matsuyue how disappointed he was with samma. Lord Matsuyue asked: "But where did your cook get the samma?" "At the Uogashi, of course," answered Lord Kokura. "Ah, so," smiled Lord Matsuyue, smugly. "No wonder. samma has to be from Meguro. That's the only place you can get real samma!"

Above is a barebone synopsis of the classic rakugo, "Tonosama no samma." Its intent obviously was to get laughs at the expense of the tonosama's ignorance and naive unworldliness. Though the episode is not unbelievable, it is rather far-fetched. Its sage (I will explain later) is not blatant but rather low-key, and its humor is droll and mild. The story's perennial popularity would seem to indicate that the common people enjoyed poking fun at the species tonosama.

All rakugo end in a sage, also called otoshi, or ochi, corresponding to the punch line. The sage of this story is that Meguro is miles from the sea.

The English name for samma is saury or mackerel pike; the latter is more descriptive. It looks like a small pike and tastes like mackerel. A seasonal fish, its prime is early autumn. Traditionally it has been held in low esteem because of its abundance and cheapness. But it is probably one of the most delicious fishes of Japan's coastal seas.

REDRESS
UPDATE:

Minoru Yasui,
Chair
Legislative Education Committee

Dr. Arthur S. Flemming was a most conscientious member of the U.S. Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians (CWRIC). He has served as Secretary of HEW, president of several universities and colleges, Commissioner on Aging, Chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, and has held a number of other positions of power and influence at high levels. He is a longtime, experienced practitioner in government circles. In a word, he is a "pro."

Now, though he is age 78, he is a vigorous, dynamic person—still going strong! He actively chairs several national citizens committees on civil rights. He is keenly concerned about redress. He believes that a mass movement of citizens is needed to prod Congress to taking any action on redress. Unless members of Congress are convinced that most Americans feel strongly that such aberrations as forced removal and detention of individuals without charges should never again occur—we will be a long, long time (maybe never) in achieving redress.

Dr. Flemming points out that the miniscule Nikkei population in the United States cannot accomplish redress by themselves. Our numbers and our direct influence is much too small. We must move other individuals and groups to make redress their cause, too, because it could adversely affect the future for all of us.

Interest in issues of evacuation, relocation and detention will not last forever. The CWRIC report and recommendations in 1983 got nationwide coverage. Last summer, subcommittee hearings attracted some momentary attention—and a lot of opposition. We must keep the issues alive by networking and by building coalitions with non-Nikkei groups across the country.

Personal contacts and individual involvement with other groups are essential. No one will help us, unless we ourselves are willing to participate in the activities and causes of other groups. Nikkei must concern themselves with local community, state, regional, national and international issues, too. As we contribute to other causes, with our sincere efforts, so we can expect others to contribute and support our redress cause.

Each of us are members of other groups. Through our participation in other organizations, we have opportunities to persuade such groups to support our cause. For example, Vi de Cristoforo of Salinas persuaded the local teachers group to pass a resolution supporting redress. Ultimately, the national organization of teachers endorsed redress. Further, Leslie K. Furukawa and other Asian attorneys in the Los Angeles area proposed that the State Bar of California support redress—and by dint of a great deal of effort and effective lobbying—persuaded the State Bar of California to support redress. Similarly, in Seattle, Cherry Kinoshita and others persuaded Mayor Charles Royer to push through a favorable resolution at the National League of Cities conference recently held in Indianapolis. We need to multiply these examples a thousand-fold!

Nationally, a prestigious citizens' coalition for redress, Americans for Personal Justice, was initiated in Washington, D.C., a couple of years ago. It needs to be activated, so that it is nationwide in scope. Individual members of the coalition need to be motivated to speak out on behalf of redress across the country.

You can help (1) by participating in local organizations, and pushing for expressed support of redress, and (2) by suggesting names, addresses and telephone numbers of influential individuals well-known at regional levels who might participate in a national citizen coalition for redress. Your personal knowledge and your contacts with individuals and organizations are keys to a successful drive.

Reflections on a Former Home

An article describing the moving of the Seattle Japanese Evangelical Church and its dedication at the Meiji-mura Museum ran in the PC Nov. 9.

by the Rev. Seiichi Michael Yasutake

EVANSTON, Ill.—Our family home for 12 years (from 1930 to 1942) in Seattle, Washington, was dedicated as a museum in Meiji-mura (Meiji village) near Nagoya, Japan, on Oct. 21, 1984. The house in which all four Yasutake children grew up was taken apart board by board and reconstructed beside over 50 other Meiji-era structures at the 250-acre museum site. The house was on top of Beacon Hill in Seattle (1312 Massachusetts St.) and it was relocated in Meiji-mura on top of a hill overlooking the large expanse of beautiful Lake Iruka.

Present at the dedication ceremonies were my mother, Hide Yasutake, my two brothers, Toshio and Joseph, and myself. Because of commitments at home, my sister, Mitsuye May Yamada (in Orange County, Calif.), was unable to attend.

The house was dedicated as the Japanese Evangelical Church. The building had been used as a church since 1949 (when our family sold the house) and was donated to Meiji-mura by its owner, Mrs. Kimiko Motoda, who expressed her pleasure in making this contribution during the dedication ceremonies.

Some 120 people attended the dedication, and many others sent congratulatory messages. President Ronald Reagan wrote that our former house "provides both an opportunity to recognize the strong ties between the United States and Japan and the enormous contribution made to America by the Issei and their descendants."

Congratulatory Messages

Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe wrote of the contribution made by the Japanese immigrants in Seattle in advancing relations between Japan and the United States. Congratulatory letters included those from Nikkei congressmen Robert T. Matsui and Norman Y. Mineta, and senators Daniel K. Inouye and Spark M. Matsunaga.

Matsui referred to the building as "a reminder of the many threads which intertwine the Japanese and American cultures and histories." Matsunaga, paying tribute to our father, noted that "the house was for many years the home of Jack Kaichiro Yasutake, a highly respected leader in Seattle's Japanese American community."

After the ceremonies, we toured the building with its four bedrooms and a bathroom upstairs, a large parlor and dining room combination (used as the worship sanctuary by the Issei church congregation), kitchen and pantry downstairs, and a large entrance hallway by the front door. The full basement is to include the furo, which was imported to Seattle from Japan and was now being brought back with the house! The house was almost as we left it when we were "evacuated" in April 1942.

As the touring party entered the front entranceway, my mother recounted to Chubu Nippon TV News how two FBI agents made their way to that very entrance hallway to arrest my father on Dec. 7, 1941.

In response to a question by the TV interviewer as to what was uppermost in my mind, I recalled my feeling at the end of the war: that the devastation had finally ended and the question of which nation won the war no longer seemed relevant.

It was difficult not to be moved to tears by those vivid memories of wartime fear and anxiety in that very house, which was located in the land with which the U.S. had been at war. During this brief house tour, all these memories flooded our minds as family members talked about various rooms and household items preserved from those years.

There are two other overseas structures relocated in Meiji-mura. One is the former Japanese Congregational Church from Hilo, Hawaii, and the other is the former house of Yasuo Kubota in São Paulo, Brazil.

In a separate building, there was a whole floor of displays of photographs, family journals, and books, including our sister's Camp Notes and Other Poems. Other items of interest depicting the life of the Japanese residents in the U.S.—in homes, schools, temples, churches, kenjinkai gatherings, and in camps—were also on display.

To our surprise, we saw that a group picture of Issei men in a Missoula, Montana "internment camp" included our father, who had been confined there at one time.

Meiji-mura Officials

The Yasutake family along with Mrs. Motoda was honored by Meiji-mura officials before and after the ceremonies, in particular by Dr. Masaru Sekino, director of Meiji-mura; Suemichi Tsuchiya, director of the Tokyo office; Dr. Juro Kikuchi, architect and historian; and Masatoshi Nishio, the architect who supervised the transportation and reconstruction of the house at Meiji-mura.

JACL was represented by Ken Nakano, Boeing engineer and resident of Kirkland, Wash., who, as a bilingual JACLer and chair of its international relations committee, worked out the final details of getting the house transported to Meiji-mura.

Accompanying Poem

One of the poems written by our sister Mitsuye in Camp Notes and Other Poems vividly brings back to my mind this former Beacon Hill house as "our hilltop home in Seattle overlooking the valley."

This poem, "Bedtime Story," is striking in its contrast of perceptions of society by the Issei father and his Nisei daughter.

For the Issei father, this beautiful Japanese legend expresses his gratitude for the little joys in the midst of the hard, cold world of Caucasian society in which the Issei are regarded as aliens. For the little Nisei girl, the perception of society is more success-oriented and the story has no point. Thus, her quizzical question: "Is that the end?"

The poem, I conjecture, was composed in the house which now sits atop a hill overlooking Lake Iruka in Meiji-mura.

A Bedtime Story

Once upon a time,
an old Japanese legend goes as told by Papa, an old woman traveled through many small villages seeking refuge
for the night.
Each door opened a sliver in answer to her knock then closed.
Unable to walk any further she wearily climbed a hill found a clearing and there lay down to rest
a few moments to catch her breath.

The village town below lay asleep except for a few starlike lights.
Suddenly the clouds opened and a full moon came into view over the town.

The old woman sat up turned toward the village town
and in supplication called out
Thank you people of the village,
if it had not been for your kindness in refusing me a bed
for the night
these humble eyes would never have seen this memorable sight.

Papa paused, I waited.
In the comfort of our hilltop home in Seattle overlooking the valley,
I shouted
"That's the end?"

and flee from violence.

Julianna Mark-Le of Chinese Resource Center Inc., said that Asians' experience in reporting violence or extortion to public agencies including the police is that they are not taken seriously. Asians do not get any respect.

Tsian Law, representing the Asian American Council, stated that in addition to historical anti-Asian feelings, one of the causes of violence against Asians was the anti-Asian-import campaign carried on by the auto and steel industries and some unions in favor of protectionist policies. Their campaigns have led to an environment where attacks on Asians are accepted and condoned.

Local Black residents of the Logan area resented the sudden attention focusing on violence against Asians. Residents claimed that their area was always troubled by drugs, violence and crime and that city agencies had not done anything to alleviate their problems. The refugees had been dumped, without much preparation on what to expect, into substandard and often condemned housing in high-crime, blighted areas. A Black resident of the West Powelton area said, "This commission should acknowledge the fact that racism is a strong motivating factor in these attacks."

On the other hand, many speakers representing agencies and groups involved in resettlement, community, and human relations —while acknowledging there are many problems—pointed out the positive aspects of projects in crafts, dance, cross-cultural education, and people-to-people contacts alleviating tensions.

The Philadelphia JACL made the following recommendations:

- (1) Recognize that racism exists.
- (2) Counteract rumors of preferential government financial aid to the refugees, since all refugees

South Africa's 'Crime Against Humanity'

Stan Shikuma, with several other Asian Americans, was arrested Jan. 20 for demonstrating against apartheid in front of the South African consulate in Seattle.

by Stan Shikuma

International Examiner (Seattle)

National attention has focused recently on South Africa and its system of racial segregation known as apartheid. Although apartheid has existed officially since 1948, and unofficially much earlier, many Americans are still ignorant of the nature of the social and political system that the United Nations has branded "a crime against humanity."

The Republic of South Africa, more properly called Azania by the indigenous people, occupies the southern tip of the African continent. It encompasses a territory larger than the combined area of Washington, Oregon, California and Nevada. It also maintains illegal control over Namibia (South-West Africa), a former UN trust territory with an area roughly twice the size of California.

Azania is a resource rich nation, with vast tracts of fertile farmland and wealth of diamonds, gold, uranium and other strategic minerals. It sits astride the Cape of Good Hope and the major shipping lanes connecting the Atlantic and Indian Oceans. Furthermore, due to the economic development under colonial rule, Azania stands at the hub of rail and trade routes for the whole southern African region of Namibia, Angola, Botswana, Zambia, Zimbabwe and Mozambique.

The population totals about 31 million: 23 million Blacks, 5 million whites, 2.5 million "coloreds" (mixed-race) and 800,000 Asians. Apartheid refers to the system set up to ensure that all political and economic power remains firmly, solely, and perpetually in the hands of the white minority.

U.S. Rep. Mervyn Dymally (D-Calif.) was among those arrested Jan. 3 for demonstrating within 500 feet of the South Africa Embassy in Washington, D.C. His arraignment is set for today.

The white population, either English-speaking or Afrikaner, are descendants of Dutch, German and British settlers who colonized Azania starting from the late 17th century. Since the creation of the Union of South Africa in 1910, they have steadily and methodically put together a system of government and a way of life totally dependent on cheap non-white labor.

In the early 1900s, laws were passed that effectively drove Blacks off the land and into the mines, factories and fields of the growing white South African economy. In 1948, these earlier laws were enlarged and codified into a constitutional system of mandated inequality between whites and non-whites known as apartheid.

Under apartheid, Blacks cannot own land or travel freely. At all times, they must carry pass-books with them that stipulate where they work, where they live and where they are allowed to be. Any white can demand their pass-book at any time, and if they refuse to produce it, do not have it, or are in an unauthorized area, they may be jailed. Over 1,000 people are arrested under the Pass Laws each and every day.

Another aspect of apartheid is the government policy of establishing Black "homelands" called Bantustans. Thirteen percent of the most barren land in Azania is reserved for over 70 percent of the population. There are no cities or industry in the Bantustans; Blacks must travel to white areas of the country to find work. Black families are often not allowed to follow their men as they seek work, so the Bantustans are largely populated by women, children and elderly.

Outside the "homelands," Blacks are forced to live in townships which are little more than sprawling urban ghettos. The townships are kept well away from white residential, industrial and downtown shopping areas, so Blacks must commute in and out from work every day. "Coloreds" and Asians also have their own designated areas in which to live. No mixing of races is allowed.

Under apartheid, education and health care for Blacks are virtually ignored. Half of all Black children in Azania die before the age of five due to a simple lack of food, sanitation and medical services. Black children must pay to attend school in crowded, often rundown classrooms, while white children attend free, universal and modern schools. Whites in South Africa have one of the highest standards of living in the world, maintained at the expense of the misery and exploitation of the vast majority of the population.

Blacks have a long history of struggle against this oppression, and many Black organizations have developed over the years. Many Asians, "Coloreds" and whites have also joined in opposition to the established order. Continued on Next Page

Connections

South Africa's apartheid policies seem oppressively familiar to those who know the history of Japanese Americans: Individuals of the "wrong" race have been "relocated" and confined to crowded, sometimes desolate areas; they cannot become voting citizens of their own country; and they cannot marry whites, among other restrictions.

Many Japanese Americans cite other reasons for taking on a responsibility to help end apartheid:

—As Americans, whose pension funds, stock portfolios and savings accounts may be invested in companies doing business in South Africa, Asian Americans are supporting the South African economy, even if indirectly.

—As Japanese Americans work for a redressing of the WW2 internment and as they have obtained the support of civil rights groups across the country, so must Japanese Americans work for the human rights of others, both at home and abroad, especially where the U.S. government is involved.

Sen. Ted Kennedy has indicated that he will introduce legislation to address U.S. policy in South Africa. Letters may be sent to U.S. senators and representatives on this issue immediately, however. —Ed.

had already left the country. Chen and Wu were picked up by authorities after their arrival in Taiwan but have not been extradited to the U.S. because, Taiwan officials said, the U.S. and Taiwan do not have an extradition treaty. Tung is still at large.

The case developed into a major political scandal when Chen not only confessed to the murder but also implicated government officials. Among those being questioned is Col. Chen Hu-men, a military intelligence bureau director of the Defense Ministry, who reportedly met with Chen Chi-li before the latter went to the U.S. and after his return. Col. Chen's superior, Military Intelligence Bureau director Vice Adm. Wang Hsi-ling, was relieved of his duties and questioned by authorities.

On Jan. 16, President Chiang ordered an investigation into Chen Chi-li's connections with government officials. Victor Chang, a government spokesman, said that "whoever is involved, whatever their rank, they will be brought to justice." Jerome Garchik, attorney for the Committee to Obtain Justice for Henry Liu, is among those expressing doubt that Taiwan will identify the mastermind of the plot if it is a high government official. "We still don't know how high this thing goes," he said.

State Dept. spokesman Alan Romberg said that the involvement of government officials in the killing is "a very serious matter" but added that "our general position on this is that this is a matter that's under investigation and law enforcement authorities are the ones who are dealing with it."

Rep. Mineta charged the Reagan Administration with being "selective about condemning acts of terrorism." The administration, he said, "has seen fit to speak out on the kidnapping of Americans in Lebanon, hijackings in Kuwait and the killing of a Polish priest by Polish security forces, but not in the Liu murder."

FBI agents and Bay Area police are searching for a tape allegedly made by Chen Chi-li before his arrest as "insurance" in case government officials tried to place the blame solely on him. Wen Wei Bao, a Hong Kong newspaper, said on Jan. 9 that it had learned from a Bamboogang member that part of the tape reveals the reason for the killing—to warn overseas Chinese not to be disloyal to the Kuomintang or the Chiang family. U.S. officials have not confirmed the existence of the tape, however.

U.S. law enforcement officers also plan to visit Taiwan to question the two suspects.

Congressional hearings could affect U.S. arms shipments to Taiwan, which totaled $780 million last year. Despite its normalization of ties with the Beijing government in 1979, the U.S. has continued to supply Taiwan with weapons.

fortunately, government suppression has been severe, with many leaders killed, imprisoned or "banned," a particularly vicious form of house arrest. Many have been forced underground or into exile.

Two of the oldest Black liberation groups are the African National Congress (ANC), founded in 1912, and the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC), founded in 1959. These two organizations are among the leaders in the armed struggle developing there now.

Recently, apartheid in South Africa has reemerged into the international limelight. The white minority government, under continued international pressure to repudiate the policies of apartheid, enacted a new constitution giving nominal parliamentary representation to Asians and "Coloreds," but not to Blacks.

Hundreds of thousands of Blacks demonstrated in protest against the new constitution and around other political demands. More than 150 protesters were killed by South African soldiers sent into the townships to quell the protests, and dozens of Black leaders were detained without charge.

Asians and "Coloreds" called for a boycott of elections for what they labeled sham reforms. The boycott was 80 to 90 percent successful. At the same time, Bishop Desmond Tutu, an outspoken critic of the apartheid regime, was named the recipient of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize.

In response to these dramatic developments, major Black leaders in the U.S. launched the Free South Africa Movement with a sit-in at the South African embassy in Washington, D.C. Over the past month, nearly 200 people have been arrested nationwide in protests opposing both apartheid in South Africa and Reagan administration support for it through the policy of "constructive engagement."

Under President Reagan, the United States has refrained from criticizing the apartheid regime in South Africa. Instead, Reagan claims to be using "quiet diplomacy" to gently entice South Africa away from its repressive policies. Concretely, this has meant a tremendous surge in economic dealings with South Africa, a pariah among nations, on whom the United Nations has slapped an economic boycott.

William Garling, legal counsel for the Rainbow Institute and member of the Democratic Party's National Platform Committee, states that "Western influence bringing progress is an untruth. It's totally wrong. Apartheid allows [U.S. corporations] to make superprofits, and that's why they're in South Africa to begin with." They are not there, he stresses, to help the Black majority reform the system.

"It's not simply a question of Blacks getting a 'fair share' of the present system. Some Blacks might get a better deal, but capitalism being what it is, the vast majority would not benefit. The white minority will not willingly allow the redistribution of wealth necessary to make [reforms] work."

"Constructive engagement," he believes, like "new constitutions" in Azania, is no more than an illusion designed to allow the continuance of business as usual. And with $15 billion invested, American multi-nationals are involved in some pretty big business.

women and the old. Hardly any women enjoy lifetime employment and only one-third of the work force does.

Kunihiko Takano, a Japanese commentator, writing in the magazine "Shukan Daiyamondo," says that the three pillars of security for the average Japanese—lifetime employment, seniority-based wages, and a stable middle class—are crumbling.

"Lifetime employment and the seniority-based pay system, once standard features of Japanese organizations, have been badly shaken over the last decade. The myth that nearly all Japanese are middle class has been shattered by growing income disparities." The income gap between the well-paid managers and professionals and those who do not achieve that status, he adds, "threatens to upset the social harmony with which Japan's postwar economic success was achieved."

Equal Opportunity for Women

Another factor which threatens to upset the social harmony is the changing attitudes of women. In 1983, for the first time in twenty years, working wives outnumbered housewives. Twenty percent of female workers work part time, at about $2.35/hour. There is no protection or compensation; they can be fired on short notice; they receive no employment insurance, bonuses, or holiday pay. They are paid approximately 76% of what full-time female workers are paid, which, in turn, is about one-half what male workers are paid.

In 1980, Japan signed a United Nations pledge to eliminate discrimination against women during "U.N. Decade for Women: Equality, Development, and Peace." This year, the eighth year of that Decade, the Equal Opportunity Bill (EOB) is being discussed in the Diet with much opposition from both management and labor. As one writer put it, the law [EOB] may very well destroy the "basis of the stability of Japanese society and the source of power of Japanese corporations."

crimination against women during "U.N. Decade for Women: Equality, Development, and Peace." This year, the eighth year of that Decade, the Equal Opportunity Bill (EOB) is being discussed in the Diet with much opposition from both management and labor. As one writer put it, the law [EOB] may very well destroy the "basis of the stability of Japanese society and the source of power of Japanese corporations."

Additional Pressures

In addition, the average age of Japan's manufacturing plants and equipment will for the first time since WW2 be older than that of the U.S. Also, Japan is facing stiff competition from Korea and Taiwan for its share of the U.S. import market. (GM has signed a $427 million agreement to co-produce "T" cars with Dae Woo Corp. in Korea; Chrysler and Ford are investigating Korea and Taiwan as possible partners.)

With all of these pressures building on the Japanese economy, the NUMMI plant will be an important testing ground for Japanese management and industrial policy. How that system adapts to the American worker, how it adapts to American governmental regulations, and how it is adopted by other corporations could determine how it plays its course in Japan. Perhaps the most important question is, will U.S. corporations once again "surrender" to the Japanese in the interests of short-term profits, or will it invest to develop its own design and production workforce capable of meeting the Japanese challenge.
