City Treasurer Eyes $290,000 Investment Loss

BELLFLOWER, Calif.—City Treasurer Mio Sakamoto, 43, is a key figure in an investment deal which has gone sour, according to an article in the Los Angeles Times published Nov. 3, 2012. The city treasurer has not confirmed nor denied because the matter is confidential, it involves a loss of $290,000.

Last December, the city of Bellflower began purchasing zero-coupon U.S. Treasury notes through E.F. Hutton. The investment totaled $717,000. On Oct. 26, the city sold the bonds for $425,000, Sakamoto reported. The bonds were to have a yield of 8.25% over 25 years.

Zero-coupon bonds pay all their accumulated interest at maturity, which in this case was never going to happen. Though the California Government Code allows cities to invest in Treasury notes, using public money for speculative investments in hopes that the market will rise or fall is forbidden, according to Zenko James, the president of the California Municipal Treasurers Association.

Treasurer’s Responsibility

As treasurer, Sakamoto has the authority to invest city money and review investment policies. Bellflower city attorney Maurice O’Shea explained as a city council had no knowledge of these specific types of investments. City administrator Jack Simpson said it is unusual procedure to invest without consulting the council.

The city council was surprised and angry when it learned of the loss. Mayor Pro-Tem Ken Cleveland earlier this month said he had never been in this market. “I’m not sure if I’ve ever invested money—ever,” he said. “I’d have to find out who did, I am not financing anyone.” Counselman William Pendleton said, “We broke the rules, made money or didn’t, it was an improper investment. As far as I am concerned, it was R.P. Hutton’s mistake.”

Vincent Chin’s Mother Leaves U.S. in Disgust

By Judith A. Lyons

DETROIT — Months after the man who murdered her son Vincent was acquitted in a Michigan courtroom, Lily Chin has decided to return to China—perhaps forever.

“I don’t want to come back to the U.S.; I don’t want to live to leave because she couldn’t find justice in this country,” said Henry Yee who was appointed by the jury to represent Chin’s estate. “There were just too many reminders and memories of the tragedy for her here and she was fed up and depressed.

“Lily is the dynamic that the widowed housewife, and mother of adopted son Vincent, could not understand when the jury’s decision to acquit her son’s confessed killer Ronald Ebens on charges of civil rights violations.

Ebens and his nephew Michael Nitt go off with light sentences for second degree murder—three years parole and a fine of $376 each.

The two defendants who had worked in Detroit auto plants, allegedly confessed Vincent Chin for Japanese and brutality for the long hours no other was living relatives in the U.S. New legislation would make some points system based on education, professional background and English language literacy to determine eligibility for the program. JACL Urges Federal Tally of Anti-Asian Violence

By George Johnson

WASHINGTON — Increased anti-Asian violence has prompted the jalalc to call for an October 10 hearing before the Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights on Oct. 10 in Washington, D.C. Arthur Soong, president of Asian American Legal Defense and Education Fund, James Tso, president, Organization of Chinese Americans; and Floyd Shimomura, chair, JACL Anti-Asian Violence Committee, Arthur Soong; president of the Asian American Legal Defense and Education Fund; Kun Cook, executive director of the Mutual Assistance Association; Robert Matsui, president of the Organization of Asian Americans.

Shimomura’s Testimony

Floyd Shimomura, a deputy attorney general of California and part-time teacher at the University of California at Davis School of Law, appeared before the JACL and reported the reasons why he thought anti-Asian violence re-emerged in the U.S. and reported the reasons why he thought anti-Asian violence re-emerged in the U.S. and reported the reasons why he thought anti-Asian violence re-emerged in the U.S. and reported the reasons why he thought anti-Asian violence re-emerged in the U.S.

Spokesman Steve Nelson for E.F. Hutton's headquarters in New York City said the firm is not responsible and attributed the loss to "the dramatic market situation."

Declares He Was Misled
Sakamoto denied he was misled. When asked if he was aware that the bonds were bought on margin, Sakamoto said: "It's almost impossible to read what's on those confirmation slips." He told the Times there are many areas "I cannot get into because of potential litigation. But our office's understanding was that this was a proper investment."

Sakamoto also served as assistant city administrator. He was appointed city treasurer by the city council in 1980. Before joining Hutton, he was a grants consultant for several L.A. county communities, including Bellflower, Paramount and Culver City.

Two of Senator's Proposals Accepted
WASHINGTON -- Two major proposals authored by Sen. Spark Matsunaga (D-Hawaii), which would aid the flow of international trade and authorize a new round of multilateral trade negotiations, were approved Oct. 22 in House and Senate conferences began negotiations on historic trade legislation.

One of Matsunaga's amendments, approved as a floor amendment to the Senate's Omnibus Trade Bill, would lead to direct implementation on Jan. 1, 1988 of the International Convention on the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System, basically setting up a common international language among trading nations.

"The adoption of a uniform system will yield substantial benefits to companies involved in international trade," Matsunaga said. "Record-keeping will be simplified, tracking goods between countries will become easier, and compliance with restrictions on imports, such as licensing requirements, will become easier."

The Harmonized System is scheduled to be put into use on Jan. 1, 1988 by more than 40 of the world's major trading nations. It will be the first time that most of the world's trade will be conducted on a uniform record-keeping system.

In designing the amendment, Matsunaga said that meeting the internationally set deadline of Jan. 1, 1988 was of critical importance and so he proposed direct implementation in place of earlier language providing for "fast-track" approval procedure.

The conference also approved the renewal of the president's authority to continue negotiations in the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade talks. Present authority expires on Jan. 3, 1988. Matsunaga introduced earlier this year the negotiating authority last February and the legislation was included in the Senate's Omnibus Trade Bill.

"Some of the problems that are casting a long shadow over the international trading system today, such as the distortions in agricultural trade, can only be resolved on a multilateral basis," Matsunaga said, adding that the Senate bill recognized that theory.

Matsunaga, chairman of the International Trade Subcommittee, said acceptance of the president's authority and renewal of negotiating authorities were major legislative goals of the Reagan Administration.

Education Fund Offers Internships to AA Students

SAN FRANCISCO — Asian American Communities for Education (AACE) has announced the inaugural year of the Jessie Cheng Education Fund.

AACE has served the educational development needs of AA students since 1973. Its college-bound students have been assisted with college financial aid and career information.

This program is made possible by Jessie Cheng, a Honolulu philanthropist who has been supportive of Asian American organizations.

She makes annual contributions to the Organization of Chinese Americans to make it possible for students in Hawaii to participate in general high school internship programs in Washington, D.C.

She is also active in senior service organizations such as the American Red Cross.

She also promotes Chinese arts and cultural activities.

Through the Jessie Cheng Education Fund, high school seniors in San Francisco can participate in internship programs with the offices of various elected officials and local government agencies.

Supervisor Thomas Hsieh said of the program, “Ultimately, this..."
Elmer Ogawa was a congenial sort of fellow who had a knack with a camera. He was born and raised in Seattle, and he seemed to know something about people and what happened in their particular niche of history. It is likely that future historians will learn a great deal by just pawing through the pages and pictures that Elmer squirmed to put together in the first place. I might also say that Elmer seem to sense that some little person was taking the time to sort through it, catalogue it, and put it where interested students can find it.

The sad part of all this is that so much of our history as a people is being lost, once another, pass on and their papers about an extremely important time in our history are thrown out the window. We could be losing our libraries, schools and historical societies, and those who will come after us.

NCRR Calls for Letters to Reagan

By John Ota

Nakano's signature as the main obstacle to the Japanese American redress bill becoming law. Nakano is considered a political heavyweight, and the president urging him to sign the bill.

As of November 12, NCRR chapter chair Joel Aoki in Los Angeles said that San Francisco has collected some 1,600 signed letters and distributed them to Aoki. Other chapters have also gathered letters, individuals have taken the initiative to write in letters, and mail lists of those who have signed are being placed in public.

The kind of grassroots support that has been the driving force behind the redress movement all these years. The thousands of letters going to Reagan, it unlikely his staff will do more than estimate the number of letters, as they are being encouraged to do so.

You can help by asking friends and relatives to write a letter and sign their addresses on an attached form. It is important to collect as many letters as possible, so that the president will have to sign the bill.

Sample form letters can be obtained from NCRR or address Pearl Harbor survivors. Sample letters can be as short as one sentence urging Reagan to sign the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 and addressees to President Reagan, White House, Washington D.C. 20500.

The NCRR is emphasizing form letters because thousands of signatures are being collected in a form that is likely to be processed by the president's office. The effect of such dramatic increases in population are being felt both politically and socially.

The trend is that Asian immigration will continue to increase, and it will drop off from the levels established in the 1970s. In recent years, immigration from Asia has become a major issue for the future.

The numbers of Asian Americans in the United States has reached a level of "political significance." Asian Americans, however, are not a monolithic group. In Malaysia, for example, the number of concentration is very high. Los Angeles, for example, is the largest Asian American population.

While we remain the largest immigration country in the world, with over 10 million Asian Americans, we are not the only Asian American population.

Plan Would Lump All Asian Americans Together

The movement of the U.S. Census toward a data collection model that will count only single Asian Pacific category, rather than a methodology which accounts for the ethnic diversity becomes a major trend in the 1990s. This trend was finalized by January 1, 1988. After that period, only the Census can take action to modify the methodology. The consequence for the Japanese Americans for all Asian Americans is extremely disconcerting. The effect will be the absence of any mean, Argilus baseline of information from which social trends within our community can be accurately discerned. In effect, all Asian America will be painted with the same brush stroke. The ability to identify problem growth areas as well as achievement greatly diminishes. The designation as an Asian Pacific becomes an inadequate substitute for the designation, others.

Asian American communities and organizations interested in advocating for the inclusion of ethically specific data collection in the Census process. We have only until January 1, 1989 to respond.

For the Record

On the front page of the November 13 issue of F.C., a headline incorrectly stated "Citizen's Analysis of S.1009." As most readers know, the real address bill in the Senate is S.1009.

Pacific Citizen regrets the error.

MIS Celebrates 46th Anniversary in Monterey

MONTEREY, Calif. — The 46th anniversary (1941-1987) of the founding of the Military Intelligence Service Language School was celebrated at a luncheon on the Presidio of Monterey on Oct. 30, 1987.

The National Japanese American Historical Society (NJAHS), working with the Northern California MIS Committee, has put a permanent photo exhibit in Nisumura Hall at San Jose State University in whose honor a building has been named at the De Anza Language Institute in Monterey.

All branches of the U.S. armed forces participated in the impressive ceremony.

a Japanese American. A former intern at Tule Lake, Fujikawa nearly refused a request to speak about her concentration camp experience. Education and recognition are the keys, she believes, to help prevent a repeat of this appalling event in U.S. history.

Fujikawa recently spoke to a number of high school groups in Denver, graphically recalling her own personal experiences in camp—the "smelly" conditions of camp life "because that's what they most wanted to hear." In addition, she told the students that she felt at being forced behind barbed wire, a prisoner without cause or creed.

Yugi Berra's well-worn remark: "It ain't over till it's over" carried the message being forwarded by leaders of the redress movement.

Among those was Mollie Fujioka, two-term governor of the Northern California District Council of JACL and member of the executive committee of the Longevity Center of Japanese Americans (LCEC), who recently announced her candidacy for the presidency of that JACL. In a news release, Fujioka declared that redress must remain the highest priority of the JACL, and that her leadership membership has mandated it. She said, "I have a deep personal commitment to work to close this page in history and complete what is still unfinished business."

Fujikawa carries out her commitment by way of her position in the community as well as what she sees as obligations and opportunities that arise because of the fact of her history as a Japanese American. A former intern at Tule Lake. Fujikawa nearly refused a request to speak about her concentration camp experience. Education and recognition are the keys, she believes, to help prevent a repeat of this appalling event in U.S. history.

In addition, she told the students that she felt at being forced behind barbed wire, a prisoner without cause or creed. Berra emphasized the point that this revocation of my civil rights and the consequent effort for redress is an issue that every American, every-JACL member, should be involved in.

Among the leaders of the redress effort is Phyllis Murakawa, a former internee, who has assumed her candidacy for the presidency of the Redress Foundation. "I'm running on my record of working for redress for the past 12 years," she declared.

Among those who have contributed to the redress movement is George Kanegai, a former internee who has been active in efforts to bring about redress and justice for the Internment of Japanese Americans.

Although relied on its dedicated staff of 50 volunteers, advisory committee and the support of its members, JACL has always known that"The P.C. office. Please In- THE P.C. office. Please In-
