Matsui & Ujifusa Say

Strategy to Increase Redress Appropriations Ready

WASHINGTON — With Congress ultimately set to cast the final decision, the battle over how much money is budgeted for redress funds is far from over, leaders working closely with the issue related Jan. 31.

According to Rep. Robert T. Matsui (D-Calif.) and JACL-LEC Strategy Chair Grant Ujifusa, chances are good for increasing the funding level recently proposed by the Reagan budget but it's going to take hard work and an educated, targeted lobbying effort.

"The Reagan number so far is not the Bush number and it certainly is not Congress's number," Matsui said. "While it's easy to be disappointed, no one should be in anyway discouraged. Final funding decisions will be made by key congressional committees, whose members include several influential redress supporters."

"We are not taking on the entire Congress this time," Ujifusa said, "only targeted members of two full committees and two subcommittees."

Ujifusa said that he has asked New Jersey Gov. Tom Kean and Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.), both redress supporters and personally close to President George Bush, to speak to the president. Both said they would.

Ujifusa further added that "because all members of Congress regard themselves as local politicians, they must be approached by individuals and organizations who vote in their state or district. If you live in a member's constituency, that is ideal."

"In the committee lists," Ujifusa continued, "try to come up with people you know in the district described. Do you know anyone in Neal Smith's district which takes in Des Moines and Ames, Iowa? If so, ask that person to write to Smith. And also ask your friend if he would ask people and organized groups in Smith's constituency—a church or Legion Post—to contact the member's office. The same holds true for a senator's home state."

"The list of targeted congressmen and senators should be taken as JACL-LEC strategy toward the appropriations process, along with letters to President Bush and White House Budget Director Richard Darman," Ujifusa said.

"With determinism and optimism, we go at this just like we did before," Matsui, who has already contacted House and Senate budget leaders, said that a well-targeted letter campaign could make the difference with some committee members. Both Matsui and Ujifusa suggest that letters point out the following facts as to why payments should not be delayed:

- The Office of Redress Administration has already identified almost 50,000 possible redress recipients. It's officials have repeatedly stated that the process is going faster and more efficiently than expected. On Dec. 15, it

ORA: 48,000 Names of Possible Redress Recipients Compiled

WASHINGTON — Bob Bratt, administrator of the Department of Justice's Office of Redress Administration (ORA), told an overflow Washington, D.C. crowd on Jan. 26 that approximately 48,000 addresses of persons potentially eligible for redress are now on file.

Although some are duplicates, ORA's progress toward identifying all eligible individuals has been impressive, it was added.

Bratt said that he is "proud" of the "efficient" and "fruitful" operation.

Speaking at the Methodist Church Building, Bratt said that ORA needs help in identifying deceased individuals. They have been working with states, but they need to explore every avenue to identify these individuals.

Preliminary Publication Due

In a few days, Bratt said that the preliminary regulations will be published in the Federal Register in a few weeks after the regulations are finalized. The public will then have 30 days to comment.

Rep. Norman Mineta's (D-Calif.) legislative director Carol Stroebel said that they have already found a lot of support for appropriations in Congress. She emphasized, however, that the budget and appropriations processes will be long and that community involvement is imperative. As such, she said that letters to President Bush and to members of Congress will be most helpful.

Calif. Legislature Resolution Urges Immediate Redress in Full

SACRAMENTO, Calif.—Assemblyman Richard E. Floyd (D-Carson) introduced on Jan. 23 an Assembly Joint Resolution that urges Congress to vote immediately to provide the maximum amount of $500 million for reparation payments to eligible Japanese Americans who were interned during World War II.

State Sen. Ralph Dills (D-Gardena) is the principal co-author of the measure and Assemblyman Pat Johnston (D-Stockton), and Sen. Art Torres (D-Los Angeles) are co-authors.

"The internment of those 120,000 Japanese Americans during the war was one of the greatest civil rights violations in American history," Floyd said. "And it took us more than 40 years to do something about it."

"Many of the internment camp survivors are elderly people who have waited more than 40 years for an apology and some sort of a token compensation," Floyd continued. "There is absolutely no reason in the world to delay the payment... and the apology."

Floyd's joint resolution memorializes the Congress and President Bush to "honor the letter and spirit of our nation's moral and legal commitment to Japanese American internment camp survivors by voting immediately to provide the maximum authorized annual amount of $500,000,000 this upcoming fiscal year and every fiscal year thereafter until every internment camp survivor has been awarded both the apology and token recompense so long overdue."

"That," Floyd concluded, "is what this is all about. Let's do it. Now!"

JACL Blasts Anti-redress Political Ad as 'Misguided and Exploitative'

SAN FRANCISCO—A paid political advertisement calling upon veterans to oppose the appropriations for the Civil Liberties Act has been criticized as "misguided and exploitative" by the National JACL.

The ad appearing Jan. 24 in the Los Angeles Times is addressed to the attention of "Veterans, Taxpayers, Seniors" and urges individuals to contact their congressman in the "memory of the deceased and living American veterans and their families."

"It is reprehensible to believe that the Civil Liberties Act is an insult to the memory of American veterans," commented Acting National Director Bill Yoshino.

"The underlying basis of the act goes to the heart of our Constitution. The ad placed by Veteran's Services suggests that the issue is one of simply tax dollars. The issue is whether our country has the will to do what is right and just as a result of its actions toward a group of its own citizens during World War II," Yoshino emphasized.

Yoshino added that "the Congress and President Reagan had affirmed the rightness of the legislation through its passage in 1988."

"It now remains for the President Bush and the Congress to implement the provisions of the law."

Florin, Sac'to JACL open campaign for full implementation of Civil Liberties Act

SACRAMENTO, Ca.—On Jan. 10, President Reagan's proposed budget calling for less than 2% redress funding, a rate that would drag out compensation for 60 years, shattered expectations of redress recipients that the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 was being fairly implemented, according to leaders in the redress movement here.

In response to the low funding for redress and widespread talk of budget deficit and other government priorities, many JACLers here this past week (Jan. 24) organized a petition campaign calling for full implementation of the 1988 Civil Liberties Act, reported Andy Noguchi of Florin JACL redress committee.

While the campaign will last several months, the first petitions are expected to be turned in to the committee by Feb. 13 for presentation to Rep. Robert Matsui (D-Calif.) at the Feb. 18 Time of Remembrance program here.

Copies of the petition are obtainable from Florin JACL, P.O. Box 28121, Sacramento, CA 95828.

The community petition calls on President Bush and the Congress to take three actions: (1) Broadly write and interpret regulations to maintain, not restrict, eligibility of all those Japanese Americans relocated and interned by Executive Order 9066, (2) Maximize appropriations to pay redress over a three-year period, rather than 60 or even 10, before more internees pass away, and (3) Select and

NCJAR Joins Campaign for Redress Money

CHICAGO—The National Council for Japanese American Redress voted Jan. 24 to join the fight to convince the U.S. Congress to fill the nation's commitment to redress Japanese American victims of America's WW2 concentration camps. For the past eight years, NCJAR's efforts were directed at obtaining redress through a class action lawsuit. After enactment of the Civil Liberties Act, the Supreme Court killed the lawsuit.

Chinese and U.S. Writers, Historians 'Define' Chinese American of 20th Century

LOS ANGELES—The UCLA Asian American Studies Center announced the publication of Amerasia Journal 14:2 1988, a special issue on "Defining Chinese Americans: Twentieth Century Views."

The issue brings together noted historians, researchers, and writers from the People's Republic of China and the United States to address the meaning of the Chinese American experience as it has changed due to immigration patterns, generational developments, and literary expressions in this century.

According to editor Russell Leong, this issue's articles reflect two interlinked approaches to defining Chinese Americans: The Chinese perspective on emigration from China; and the Chinese American perspective which focuses on immigrant origins and the founding of communities here.

For example, the People's Republic of China terms Chinese Americans as "foreign nationals," while Chinese Americans consider themselves as Americans of Chinese descent.

Historian Him Mark Lai states in an introductory essay to the issue that the Chinese are "one of the most diverse of all the Asian communities in America today." Lai categorizes the present-day community into four groups:

1. Immigrants from the Pearl River Delta and Guangdong Province, Cantonese-speaking group, is associated with both the earlier generation of immigrants and the post-1965 group of new urban immigrants from Hong Kong.

2. Refugees and immigrants from Southeast Asia, who are ethnic Chinese from Vietnam, Kampuchea, and Laos, can be found throughout cities in California.

3. Immigrants from other parts of China, comprised of students and scholars who stayed after 1949, and since the 1970s, hail from Taiwan and the People's Republic.

4. U.S.-born Chinese, derived from the groups above, are descended from the pre-1965 immigrants.

Controversial writer Frank Chin, whose book of short stories, The Chinaman Pacific & Frisco R.R. Co. has just been published, is interviewed for this issue. Chin, the first Chinese American to have his play performed off-Broadway, airs his ideas on theatre, writing, acting, and working.

The 225-page issue contains book reviews on Chinese Americans and an annual bibliography compiled by Glenn Omatu which covers over 50 works on Asian Americans.

The UCLA Asian American Studies Center has only printed a limited number of "Defining Chinese Americans," Amerasia Journal 14:2 1988. Copies are available at $5.00 apiece plus one dollar shipping and 6½ percent California sales tax. A year subscription at $10.00 or two-years $15.00 includes 15-year index free. Checks are payable to: "Regents, Univ. of California." Order from Asian American Studies Center, 3232 Campbell Hall, University of California, Los Angeles, CA 90024.

East West Players & Mako Part Company

By Dean Takehara

Rafu Shimpo

LOS ANGELES — Amid charges of nepotism, Mako, the artistic director of the East West Players, announced that he would no longer associate with East West Players from Jan. 15.

Some people in the community claimed they have been rejected during the audition process in favor of his children, or were passed over because his wife, Shizuko Hoshi, was in charge of auditions, Mako said.

Dr. Andy Wong, chairman of the board for the East West Players, said the board did not ask for Mako's resignation. "He felt he couldn't continue because of a policy that was drawn up and adopted by the board."

The policy stated that anyone associated with the East West Players must seek the board's approval if a relative was recommended for a directing or acting slot. It was drawn up and adopted in October, when Mako was in Pennsylvania working on a film.

Mako, whose real name is Makoto Iwamatsu, had acted in numerous films, including The Sand Pebbles, Conan the Barbarian and most recently, The Wash, with Nobu McCarthy. He had acted or directed in countless East West Player productions including Pacific Overtures, Mishima and Hokusai Overtures.

announced the closing of its West Coast office, stating "it has far exceeded our expectations" in locating recipients.

- The majority of eligible recipients are the most senior members of our society. They are in their 60s, 70s and 80s. They can wait not longer.

- The law requires payments to be made within a ten-year period. The Reagan figure would violate that requirement by setting the course for a 60-year timetable.

- The law does not state that every recipient must be identified before payments begin. It states that the oldest survivors should be given priority. Payments should begin immediately for those senior recipients who have already been identified.

A Summer Seminar in Japanese Culture

Kyoto School Unlocks Variety of Traditional Arts to Foreign Students

SAN FRANCISCO — For the traveler looking for a key to unlock knowledge of the roots of Japanese culture through the practice of the traditional arts, the best kept secret in cross cultural study is the Oomoto School of Traditional Japanese Arts near the ancient city of Kyoto.

At Oomoto students learn budo, tea ceremony, calligraphy, and Noh drama. In addition students study flower arrangement for tea (Chabana), pottery making, and attend formal lectures on aspects of history and culture. Class trips include a visit to the largest Zen temple in Kyoto, Daitoku-ji, and the Urasenke Tea School.

During the month long intensive students engage in a total immersion course, living as Japanese: wearing kimono and geta, eating Japanese food, bathing in communal baths, sleeping on tatami mats while practicing these arts under the supervision of master teachers, some of whom are Living Treasures of Japan. While the instruction is in Japanese each class includes a translator who assists English-speaking students.

The school's focus is on doing: by attempting to wield a brush, a Noh fan, a wooden sword and a tea whisk, the neophyte enters a world of experience. Perception, attention and observation of detail are developed. The body learns. Western linear modes are set aside for new ways of learning with the senses.

Since 1976 over 200 students from every part of the world have attended the seminar. The Oomoto School of Traditional Japanese Arts will be held in 1989 from June 5 through July 4. The full cost of room, board, tuition and materials, including a full set of summer kimono and martial arts attire for use during the seminar is $1,900 U.S. for the month long course. Transportation is not included. To apply for the 1989 class, write directly to Yoshitaka Nishino, Director of the International Department, Oomoto Foundation, Kameoka-shi, Kyoto-fu, Japan 621, or for information in the United States, contact coordinator, Patricia Ryan, 168 Grand View Ave., San Francisco, CA 94114, (415) 641-4841.

EDITORIAL OF THE PACIFIC CITIZEN:

Redress and the Budget

THE REAGAN administration's final budget was a document of 3,000 pages in seven volumes. It was sent to Congress in January as a proposal for government spending in fiscal 1990 which begins Oct. 1, 1989. The budget called for expenditures of $1.2 trillion which is an unimaginably huge figure.

It is a virtual impossibility for any one person, or even a team of number-crunchers, to know every last detail about that proposed budget. The likelihood is that many unrelated teams contributed to its drafting. Everyone involved understood that it would bear little resemblance to the ultimate budget which will be agreed upon after near-endless wrangling between the new Bush administration and Congress.

Thus there is reason to be disappointed, but not entirely frustrated, that the Reagan budget proposes only a token $20 million for Redress payments. Like so many other budget figures it probably was picked out of the air without any real understanding simply because numbers had to be attached to the item.

But the casual and insensitive treatment given Redress in the budgeting process is warning that JACL cannot diminish its efforts. Key figures in the Bush administration and Congress, beginning with members of the budget and appropriations committees, need to be reminded that the healing process begun with the passage of the Redress bill cannot proceed without funds.

The law signed by President Reagan last summer provides for payment of $1.25 billion over a 10-year period. No more than $500 million may be appropriated in any one year. Most of the estimated 60,000 beneficiaries are elderly. The essence of justice requires that the largest permissible amount be appropriated and distributed as quickly as possible.

Kagawa's Influence and Modern Japan

My parents were active Buddhists but it was from them that I heard of Toyohiko Kagawa, Japan's best-known Christian. This was some time in the 1930s, and Kagawa had come to the United States on one of his preaching missions.

Kagawa preached an unorthodox brand of Christianity that had an universal appeal. It had to do with matters like social justice for the oppressed, the hungry in Japan's slums and the folly of military aggression. He seemed to have a self-assumed mission of making fat cats uncomfortable, and by and large it appealed to Issei who certainly were not among the privileged.

I didn't dwell further on Kagawa until some months ago when George Yasukochi of Berkeley told me a Kagawa biography was being written in observance of the 10th anniversary of his birth. It was sponsored by the American Committee for the Kagawa Centennial Project and the author was Robert Schildgen of Oberlin, Ohio.

The book, titled Toyohiko Kagawa, Apostle of Love and Social Justice, has been published (Centenary Books, 1442-A Walnut St., #415, Berkeley, CA 94709), and it is a pleasant surprise. One does not expect much of publications like this, but Schildgen has produced a book that is readable, balanced and scholarly, meaning there are plenty of footnotes to document an unusual story.

Kagawa emerges as something of a single-minded eccentric, but eccentricity is often the hallmark of individuals of intense dedication. He has been compared to Ghandi and Mother Theresa. While acknowledging his tremendous influence, Schildgen considers such comparisons hardly appropriate.

Schildgen writes that Kagawa had "an enormous ego, basked in public attention and was an inexhaustible self-promoter with a driving need for recognition." But he lived ascetically, and used the attention he enjoyed to promote his causes. Schildgen notes:

"Many of the reforms Kagawa fought for have been incorporated into modern Japanese society. It now enjoys universal suffrage, freedom for unions and political organizations, adequate medical care, good education, decent housing, vastly improved land ownership rights and numerous other social services which he tirelessly promoted. The cooperative movement (which Kagawa pushed vigorously) has flourished. The peace movement is one of the world's strongest. While Christianity has not spread as Kagawa had hoped, at least in numbers of conversions, it continues to have a significant impact on the nation's values."

Schildgen mentions, but does not venture to assay the role of the postwar U.S. occupation in those reforms. However, he does suggest that Kagawa's charisma led Americans to ascribe to him power beyond what he really had in Japan. "The desire to revere him was so strong," Schildgen writes, "that his followers in the West placed him on an altar that removed him from the tensions of genuine dialogue..."

Be that as it may, this volume does an excellent job of putting the Kagawa story in perspective. Kagawa was a remarkable man for his time. This reader was left wondering whether Kagawa had the misfortune to be born a half century too soon. Much of his energy and influence were spent by 1962 when he decried Japan's "growing materialism and the breakdown of sexual morality," describing the cause as "the price we are paying for modernism and capitalism. The impulse of greed has begun to dominate our lives."

Would he be listened to today? Let's put it another way. His message would seem to be as important today as it was back then.

A Post Mortem

Emperor Hirohito's death was expected from the onset of his last illness, for the court physicians had known that he had cancer. For him the end must have come as a release from an unnecessarily prolonged suffering, and I am glad for that. At the senior club, an old lady, like myself a survivor from Meiji, said: "Demo, hotto shimashita ne"—"But, I was relieved, for he had suffered so long." It was exactly my feeling.

I was sorry he died without performing one last act of tennoship.

I have always maintained that Richard Nixon would have gone down in history as a great president if only he had owned up to Watergate and apologized to the nation. Hirohito was in a similar situation. If he had only acknowledged his responsibility in the war and apologized to the world and to the Japanese people, he would have gained an incomparably greater stature as a truly fine man.

All through his illness a good part of the Japanese populace made a great show of concern, which to some Americans seemed somewhat overdone, and even maudlin. When finally the death came, Premier Takeshita said "I am grief stricken." On the other hand a not inconsiderable minority of the people had voiced their suspicion, which for some of them had been a long known, undisguisable fact, that the last tenno was responsible for the war. Has their voice been stifled away forever?

What do average, well-educated, and fair-thinking Japanese think? I had been wondering. Then I received a letter yesterday from the son of an old friend of my USC days with whom I had spent one afternoon last year. An engineer, he has spent many years in third world countries and has seen Japan from the outside. Below I present his translation, done as literally as I could.

"The emperor is dead. The late emperor was an extraordinarily fine person, I think, and I am sad. I was born in 1936, and received my education after the war. Though I was still young, however, I experienced much unhappiness and suffering, during and after the war. On the side of our enemies there also was much unhappiness and suffering.

"Even in today's prosperity I occasionally glimpse the shadows of the last war. This is a fact that can never be done over again (yarinaoshi ga kikanai jijitsu). In this vein of thinking, as a Japanese who has inherited the responsibility for the war, I am compelled to reflect on the tenno institution's meritorious and criminal roles in the Japanese society, and its responsibility in the last war. It may be difficult to expect any deep understanding of the tenno institution from the peoples of other countries. Is it an impossible proposition to think of the late heika's (majesty's) personality apart from the endeavor to preserve our respect for the tenno institution? In me there is a conflict between logical thinking and feeling for the late emperor."

Commission for Social Justice

THAT'S THE NAME for a national, charitable organization comprised of state and local chapters organized through the Sons of Italy. It's purpose: "To ensure equal concern, treatment, respect and opportunity for all people." The Commission "works tirelessly, not only to eliminate that which is misrepresentative and ethnically insensitive, but to accentuate and promote that which offers a true and positive portrayal of the Italian American."

An "Italian JACL," in a matter of speaking.

MANY JAPANESE AMERICANS may express surprise by the observation that among ethnic groups, Italian Americans are among the most maligned. The various subtle and many not-so-subtle, and all of them with a vicious edge, ways of denigrating an ethnic group. We AJA's (Americans of Japanese ancestry) have heard our own brand and continue to hear new as well as old ones.

Let me share some that Italian Americans experience.

THERE ARE THOSE pervasive concoctions of characters that, repeated often enough (as they are), begin to take on their own non-existent "truth." These are often promoted and propagated through the medium of television as well as the movies. One study showed, for example, portrayal of Italian Americans as: most not speaking proper English; one in six engaged in criminal activities; most had low status jobs, only one in seven being an executive or a professional; on prime time television, almost 50 percent are shown in a negative light, while only one in four is shown in a positive light.

And there are specific, individual incidents. Just to recite a few that space permits.

HAVING FAMILY NAMES that end in a vowel is considered by some segments of our society as being an impediment or a negative factor. (Just reviewing quickly, I can't think of an AJA family name that doesn't end in a vowel. Even "Ohara.") But can you believe that N.Y. Gov. Mario Cuomo was once counseled by law school officials to change his name? Obviously the governor had the good sense and integrity to stay as he is.

Another prominent Italian American—Dr. Edmund Pelligrino, former president of Catholic University—was advised by faculty that he would get into medical school, if he changed his last name.

And there are those incessant ads.

THERE'S A PIZZA operation with the name "Godfather's Pizza." I've never been to one of its shops, but no one has to explain to me the innuendos in picking that name. And, yes, the CSJ (Commission for Social Justice) has had need to approach this pizza operation to cease offensive, ethnic advertising. Campbell Soup also had to be reproached for a commercial in which Americans of Italian descent were depicted as vulgar, barbaric and slovenly. There was actually a California vineyard marketing its wine with the name "Dago Red." Undoubtedly some of you out in California saw the bottle in the stores. (I trust you boycotted the stuff.) And, yes, there have been incidents where some top officer of a major corporation has publicly referred to Americans of Italian descent as "wops."

The message should be clear for all ethnic groups: Bigotry does not discriminate.

San Jose JACL & Community to Start Endowment Foundation

SAN JOSE, Calif.—An ambitious determination to establish a Japanese American community foundation as an on-going source of support for local groups has been manifested by an announcement of a gala San Jose JACL dinner dance and art show for Saturday, March 4, at the Fairmont Hotel here.

Billed as the social event of the year, the JACL and the newly organized Japanese American Community Foundation named Rep. Norman Mineta and I.K. Ishimatsu as honorary co-chairmen, who extended an open invitation to the black-tie optional dinner and dancing to the nine-piece band "Jest Jammin'" and the deejay offerings of the "Sound Express."

Ken Azebu and Dede Ogami are dinner co-chairmen. Leon Kimura is the San Jose JACL president.

As part of the fund-raising gala dinner, both organizations are pre-selling a limited issue print, "The Red Lady," by Ukiyo-e stylist Hisashi Otsuka, who captures the revered portrait and mystique of 36 immortal poets of Japan with contemporary strokes of bold colors and detail mixing harmoniously the past and present. The print, which retails at $250, is being presold at $200 with proceeds to be shared by JACL and JACF.

Prints will be available during the pre-dinner champagne reception for Otsuka. Those unable to attend the 6:30 event will have their prints shipped directly to their home.

Dinner follows at 7:30 p.m. The San Jose Taiko Group will entertain. For ticket information or purchase of the Otsuka print (see p. 6, Jan. 20, P.C.): call Ken Azebu, (408) 970-0922.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gratified

Thank you for including my paper in your Holiday Issue. As I mentioned in my initial letter to P.C., the apparent differences in treatment between the interned Japanese Americans and the German and Italian POWs has been of interest to me for some time. It is very gratifying to finally see the story in print.

Nelson Article

Along the vein of Ronald Nelson's article, "A Comparison of U.S. Treatment of German and Italian POWs with Interned Japanese Americans during WW2" in the special holiday issue, I have wondered through the years since evacuation whether the same agency that looked after our needs, the WRA, looked after the needs of some European refugees any differently.

There were some articles during the camp years that the WRA was accommodating the needs of the European Refugees in some camp back East. I had thought it was Fort Niagara but it may have been Fort Ontario.

I have yet to read any details of this WRA involvement with others. I am wondering if any of your readership has come across any of the details in their research of the past.

No Name Calling

As an active member of JACL and NCRR, I am concerned about the acrimonious tone of Shig Wakamatsu's letter to Donna Kotake regarding the role of different individuals and organizations in the successful campaign for the passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988.

Ms. Kotake wrote a thoughtful, reasoned letter, giving due credit to the skills of the JACL-LEC leaders, and urging that we acknowledge the contributions of many others in that campaign. At the JACL National Convention in Seattle last August, I too felt that we needed to recognize the important efforts of other groups to this victory.

Ex-POWs on Redress

Editor's note: The following letter was initially sent to Homer Yasui, who passed it along to P.C.

Just a note to let you know that this is one veteran's organization that is happy to see that long justice has been done.

Congratulations in winning the fight for an apology and winning the monetary benefits, ($20,000).

'The Next Step' Theme for San Jose Feb. 19 Procession

SAN JOSE—The Nihonmachi Outreach Committee will sponsor the Day of Remembrance program which commemorates the signing of executive Order 9066 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt on Feb. 19, 1942.

This year the program will be held at the San Jose Buddhist Church Betsuin at 640 N. Fifth St., at 6 p.m. The program will begin with a short candlelight procession through the Japantown area, returning to the Buddhist Church gym with speakers and a reception.

Speakers at the program include: Rep. Norman Y. Mineta, noted author Jeanne Wakatsuki Houston, and Gary Jio from the Nihonmachi Outreach Committee.

With the signing of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988 last year, the program's focus will shift to the appropriations campaign. Since the average age of the eligible internees is 65, with many in their 80's and 90's, speedy appropriation of funds by Congress is critical to ensure that eligible recipients receive their token payments before they die, the program sponsors pointed out.

For information: Kathy Higuchi (408) 739-3982 or Susan Hayase (408) 292-6938.

Judge Kobayashi Addresses Florin JACL

FLORIN, Ca.—Over 100 members and guests attended the Florin JACL installation dinner Jan. 20 at Fuji Restaurant to hear Judge Charles C. Kobayashi of the Sacramento Municipal Court. He stressed the necessity of power pressure and the results that can be won.

Incoming president Curtis Namba and his cabinet were sworn in by George Kondo, NCWNP regional director. The state of the chapter address was given by attorney Richard Uno. The Rev. Mark Nakagawa gave the invocation. Donna Komure-Toyama was mistress of ceremonies.

Evening ended with emcee's remarks that Florin JACL had a successful year of many activities and an ever-growing membership.

MOSHI MOSHI

As the readers can see, he is deeply troubled. From all the things he knows about the late emperor he is forced to admit that the emperor was involved in the war, yet he is reluctant to accept the completely factual point of view.
