American Jewish Committee Partners With Japan JACL on Cultural Exchange

LOS ANGELES — Leaders of the Japan Chapter of the JACL and American Jewish Committee (AJC) met in Tokyo in March to discuss AJC programs between the U.S. and Japan. Dick Yamashita and Barry Saiki, past presidents of the chapter, discussed possibilities for intercultural education with David A. Harris, AJC's Washington representative. Mr. Harris, who is from San Diego, head of AJC's new Pacific Rim Institute.

According to Sandberg, the institute will have both domestic and international emphases. Its programs will seek to strengthen the ties of Japanese and American pluralism.

SAN FRANCISCO—San Francisco’s annual Bay Area Asian Week will be held this year from May 12 to June 16, with guest speaker, the American Jewish Committee.

In addition to exchange programs, the AJC is developing programmatic ties with Japanese and U.S. government agencies, academia, business, and the arts. Its objective is to strengthen bilateral ties between the U.S. and Japan in order to improve understanding and develop greater communication between the two countries.

The AJC has long been concerned with the development of positive relationships between Jews and Japanese Americans. With historic ties between the two communities, AJC officials see new opportunities to develop the ties of the group.

The AJC’s Japan Chapter, which recently celebrated its 14th year anniversary, continues to maintain the highest concentration of Japanese Americans in the Los Angeles area. Since then annual scholarships have been awarded to the most distinguished students in the San Francisco area, New England area, greater Los Angeles and Chicago area.

The local Japanese American Community Graduation Program, which began as a single $50 scholarship, given by the Mile-Hi Chapter of JACL, will celebrate its 14th year this year with scholarships in excess of $20,000 to graduating seniors from various community organizations.

The actual Tanabata takes place each July 7 when two stars above the Earth's atmosphere cross paths thus representing two ancient lovers who meet only once a year. It is a sad and touching moment but a happy event well celebrated in Japan.

Pacific Square will be celebrating its 14th anniversary in conjunction with this year’s Tanabata Festival. To further celebrate this occasion, Pacific Square will conduct its 5th Annual Food Walk. There will also be a special recognition of the Great Leap Foundation.

Mistake Time

TIME ENRAGED. Not once, but twice in a single sentence. It happened in a small item in the May 8 issue of the weekly news magazine. The story was about American meetings in New Delhi who demurred for compensation for the years of slavery suffered by their ancestors. This was the offending sentence: "Two years ago, Japanese Americans forced into internment camps during World War II were awarded checks for $20,000."

Fact: No checks have been awarded. Congress voted awards, but has failed to appropriate the dollar in appropriations.

Fact: Congress approved and President Reagan signed the Civil Rights Act in August 1988, not two years ago.

These misstatements of fact by the nation's leading news magazine are disturbing.

Like any responsible publication, Time has a series of checkpoints where the accuracy of its statements are checked and double-checked. For those of us who are close to the subject, the fact that not one cent has been paid is well known. It is also well known that Redress became law last summer only after prolonged effort. But Time's experienced professional researchers whose job is to prevent errors from slipping by were unaware of these facts.

What does this show? That Time's research was inexcusably sloppy? Yes, that much more. This incident shows the Japanese American community must end its interminable squabbling about who deserves the most credit for the so-far only partial success of Redress. The Japanese American community must renew its efforts to tell its story. The Japanese American community must also unite to publish the campaign to achieve a fulfillment of the Civil Rights Act.

The Man Who Taught Kids to Swim

He was known as Harry Udall and everyone thought he was Hawaiian. He did nothing to spoil the illusion. Colorful short shots were his trademark. But his real name was Harry Murakami, born Aug. 7, 1896, to a Japanese immigrant and his Hawaiian wife. That made Harry a Nisei and he was an unusual sports figure among a people who have distanced themselves in a variety of sports.

Harry died on April 28 at the age of 93. His big, generous presence in a slightly wavy body, simply wore out. Until last October, when he finally had to retire, he had taught swimming at the University of Denver, mostly to toddlers and their mothers. He liked nothing more than teaching kids, especially little kids, to swim. Someone once estimated that Harry had taught some 30,000 people to swim since he moved to the Denver area during the war years, and that figure is probably conservative.

Harry used to say that he learned to swim when his father tossed him off a pier. That was probably just a story. Swimming came naturally to him. He was a 15-year-old high school kid when Duke Kahanamoku, Hawaii's Olympic hero, picked him for a swimming tour of the States. That led to a scholarship at Northwestern University, but at the time Harry was more interested in baseball.

He played at the University of Pennsylvania, and also had a fling at low-level professional baseball as a second baseman and shortstop. (A grandson, Dave Collins, is an outfielder for the Cincinnati Reds.) Harry even played semi-pro football, as a 110-pound center. He taught swimming at the YMCA until required to retire at age 67, but he couldn't stay away from the water. The University of Denver found a place for him.

Harry coached competition swimming, but his greatest love was working with kids. Some of his pupils were swimming before they could walk. He had a way with kids, and somehow they learned to share his love of the sport.

After he left the YMCA I sort of lost touch with Harry except, every once in a while, I'd hear about a great job he was doing at the university. The other day one of his grandchildren called to say Harry was in a second base umpire and it didn't seem to like him very much. Several days later he was dead. He was a great little guy. He touched tens of thousands of young lives, taught them a little about coping and overcoming fear, and what better way is there for a man to be remembered?

Chinese, Japanese & In-Between

Re: Oodi, Baker, Lungren

In a letter to the editor (April 7, P. C.), Mas Akai expressed the opinion that Japan owns Lillian Baker and former Congressman Dan Lungren. For Oodi's information, it is the nature of political power that we measure, political influence is exercised by determining the ability to reward those who are in our interest and punishing those who do not. Lungren was the only member of Congress who supported the Baker and Head Internment of Civilians to oppose removal of the former internment camps. It is a generally accepted fact that the Lungren nomination for California state treasurer was defeated due to the opposition of a family formed Asian American coalition.

In short, Lungren "paid the price" because (1) he was unwavering in his opposition to the Baker and Head Internment of Civilians, (2) he understood the rapidly growing political influence of Asian Americans in California, (3) JACL, doesn't own Lungren an apology. On the contrary, we owe it to ourselves and our country to quit being the "Quiet Americans" who continue to suffer in silence.

Shortly after the defeat of the Lungren nomination, while campaigning for the presidency, George Bush, whose position on race relations is at best only a pretense went out in favor of redress; and President Reagan signed the Civil Rights Act. This is another example of Asian American political power in what was then thought to be a key area of the 1988 Presidential election influence decisions? Perhaps not so much.

With regard to Oodi's contention that Lillian Baker's opposition to internment is based solely on her conflicts with certain Japanese Americans over the use of the term "Nisei," I believe he is completely mistaken. His does believe that; then surely he also must believe that the term is made of individual Chinese.

GFB-NVA Wins Support

We in Hawaii are usually left at the back of the race in rating our contributions to the land. But thanks to the Hawaii Hana News, we have a new move- ment to organize the Go For Broke Na- tional Veterans Association and its profes- sional arm.

In fact, we heard that Nikkei warriors are urged not to fade away but to go out with a bang; this is a fine idea. The major purpose of the GFB-NVA--to further pub- licize the Nikkei--is an objective we cannot have tape recorders so that in crossing the Japan Sea and being implanted in Nippon, a bit of the edge may have worn off. And if one stops to think about it, even among the Chinese, the pronunciation (dialect) is such that often they need interpreters among them--even though both are reading the same book. It would make for an absolutely fascinating bit of reading if one were to expose to a book by some scholarly etymologist on the sub- ject.

If there be any out there who can point me to such a book--English, please--I would be indebted.

OLD HABITS are... well, habit-forming. The main factor is that Japanese people have a very strong sense of group. One does not want to be left out or left out of consideration for someone else. This is especially true when it comes to Chinese, Japanese and In-Between.

Among OTHER THINGS I don’t know is the Chinese language. Oh, I’ve heard the term for “thank you” which sounds (to me, at least) as “shou- shay.” And when I happened to come across the fun- yu (southern Japanese reading) of sha (sara) or oyu (ma), my mind perked up. In Nihongo the meaning is “thank” or “apologize.” Persecution eventually awoke the Japanese custom of saying “Sottomu danku...” (although not much...) .

The Chinese pronouncement given in the dictionary is “shou” although the Japanese on-yomu (Chinese pronunciation) is given as “sha”. Close but not right on target.

In order, then, for the organization to be able to carry out its human rights and social justice objectives, the support of the national and local chapters is vital. The JACL's national headquarters, located in Washington, D.C., serves as a central resource for the organization's programs and activities. It provides financial and administrative support to the local chapters and works to promote the JACL's mission and goals on a national level.

It is important for the organization to continue to attract new members and to retain existing members. This can be accomplished through a variety of methods, including outreach programs, social events, and educational programs. The JACL also benefits from the active involvement of its members, who work to carry out the organization's mission and goals in their local communities.

The JACL's membership is made up of individuals from diverse backgrounds, including Japanese Americans, Japanese Canadians, and Japanese Brazilians. The organization works to promote understanding and respect for the diverse cultures and experiences of its members. It also works to promote social justice and human rights for all people, regardless of race, ethnicity, or nationality.

The JACL's headquarters is located at 1400 L Street, N.W., Suite 1000, Washington, D.C. 20005. For more information about the organization, please visit its website at www.jacl.org.
