New National JACL Officers Take Office

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Candidates for the six National Board Offices were elected last week at the 31st Biennial JACL Convention. All ran without opposition but required a simple majority. The new JACL national officers, with the number of votes received, are:

President—Cressey Nakagawa (inc.), 88; vice president for general operations—Priscilla Ouchida (inc.), 73; Lillian Kimura (write-in), 1; vice president for public affairs—Floyd Mori, 72; vice president for planning and development—William Kaneko, 89; vice president for membership and services—Ted Masumoto, 81; secretary-treasurer—Tom Nakao Jr., 50; Randolph Shibata (write-in), 1.

31st Biennial JACL Convention in San Diego Ends; LEC Honors 12

By Harry K. Honda

SAN DIEGO — Curtains for the 31st Biennial National JACL Convention came down slowly—taking up four hours—at the Sayonara Banquet and Dance last Friday (June 22) at the Pacific Ballroom of Princess Resort but in a memorable, inspiring and meaningful fashion.

As for highlights, they were the presentation of the Japanese American of the Biennium Awards to educator Dr. Ronald Takaki in absentia, film producer Steven Okazaki and Rep. Robert T. Matsui; the LEC's Redress Celebration and awarding of one-of-a-kind ceramic plates created by Fresno ceramicist Robert Ogata to 12 honorees; and installation of the national JACL officers for the next biennium.

Nakagawa Reelected

Cressey Nakagawa was reelected national president, running unopposed but such election also required a majority of the chapters present and voting to be seated. Other officers also ran unopposed. They were:

The only other incumbent Priscilla Ouchida, v.p. / general operations; Mt. Olympus chapter president Floyd Mori, v.p. / public affairs; William Kaneko, v.p. / planning and development; Olympia chapter past president Ted Masumoto, v.p. / membership services; Cleveland chapter past president Tom Nakao Jr., secretary-treasurer; and youth council chair Trisha Murakawa and youth council representative Kim Tachiki.

Rep. Robert Matsui of Sacramento swore in the officers.

Remarks were extended by National JACL President Nakagawa of San Francisco, who chaired and managed to adjourn the national council meeting with 90 minutes to spare. He briefly reviewed the events and direction of JACL over the past biennium "as we step into the '90s with optimism."

Serving as mistress of ceremonies were Denise Yamada, KNSD—Channel 10 news anchor, for the main banquet; Peggy Liggett of Fresno and Meriko Mori of West Los Angeles, for the LEC Celebration.

JACL-LEC Celebration

The JACL-LEC Celebration marked the "redress" victory which was made possible by the strength of the human spirit, plus a faith in American democracy and let us not forget all the Americans of every race and creed who helped us." LEC chair Jerry J. Enomoto, past national JACL president from Sacramento, declared. "And let us pledge to battle injustice wherever, whenever, and against whomever it arises."

The 12 honorees and the respective presenters were:

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye (D-Hawaii) in absentia

from Enomoto; Sen. Spark M. Matsunaga, posthumously from Shig Wakamatsu; Sen. Daniel K. Akaka (D-Hawaii) in absentia from Mae Takahashi; Rep. Norman Mineta (D-Calif.) from Henry Tanaka; Rep. RESOLUTION PRAISES WWII'S NISEI DRAFT RESISTERS

JACL Acts to Heal Community Wounds

NO DISSENT HEARD—Representatives from the Pacific Northwest enjoy the National Council's unanimous vote for a resolution regarding the draft resisters. SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Delegates to the National Convention last week formally recognized the patriotism of those WWII internees whose belief in their constitutional rights led them to refuse induction into military service. By unanimous consent, the National Council adopted a resolution that calls such draft resisters men who "deserve a place of honor and respect" in Japanese American history. The resolution also expresses regret for "any pain or bitterness" caused by the JACL's failure to acknowledge the fundamental loyalty of these internees.

A prosecuting attorney on criminal cases for the Seattle attorney's office, Vicki Toyohara-Mukai, president of Seattle Chapter JACL, said that the chapter brought the resolution before the National Council to heal wounds that have divided the community since WWII.

With the same objective, the chapter had submitted a resolution at the 1988 convention that asked the JACL to apologize for actions taken during WWII that caused the so-called No-No Boys "injuries, pain and injustice." That resolution generated considerable debate.

But, Toyohara-Mukai said, "It was never our intent that Resolution No. 7 create the emotional discord and dissent that occurred."

Unable to come to a consensus in 1988, the National Council referred the resolution to a Presidential Select Committee, which was to issue its findings in 1990.

Toyohara-Mukai reported that an independent Seattle-area committee, comprising chapter members and Nisei veterans, had also studied the issue, and that its findings were "strikingly similar

Peter Irons Challenges JACL to Be Concerned of Others in 'Exile' and 'Concentration Camps'

By Harry K. Honda

SAN DIEGO — Peter Irons, an attorney deeply involved with the coram nobis legal team which challenged the wartime internment of the three Nisei—Yasui, Korematsu and Hirabayashi and a political science professor at UC San Diego, was the keynote speaker at the National JACL Awards banquet Monday night (June 18) at the Princess Resort convention center.

In the course of his speech, "Some Victory for Humanity," which refers to Horace Mann's exhortation to graduates of Antioch College of 1859, a glimpse of wartime JACL history materialized that "perhaps (was) the most disturbing" to him when Hirabayashi's lawyers had asked the JACL to file a supporting appeals brief and were rebuffed.

Irons recalled that JACL leaders had earlier refused to support Min Yasui's challenge to the 1942 curfew orders. The JACL statement read, "National Headquarters is unalterably opposed to test cases to determine the constitutionality of military regulations."

The author whose recent book delves deeply on the coram nobis cases continued the JACL made the statement also urging Japanese Americans to accept "sacrificing some of our privileges and rights of citizenship" to keep the

National JACL Creates Legacy Endowment Fund

SAN DIEGO — A new endowment or legacy fund that will provide income for national and chapter programs got approval from the National Council last week.

A steering committee comprising the national president, national secretary/treasurer, national director and the eight district governors will begin work immediately on a fund-raising campaign.

The National Board has set a goal of $10 million, to be raised over a 3-year period beginning this September.

Earnings from the fund are to be distributed as follows: 65% for national programs, 20% to chapters, 10% for chapter and district programs, and 5% to be retained as a provision for growth of the fund.

public from "denouncing the Japanese as disloyal and dangerous."

Irons added, "the price of this position, it seems to me as a lawyer and historian, was to cheapen the Constitution."

Then he quickly added, "Fortunately, the JACL supported the Coram Nobis Legal Team when it began the effort in 1983 to clear the criminal records of Gordon, Min, and Fred."

No mention was made of the JACL brief in support of the Korematsu case before the U.S. Supreme Court in 1944, which was later published as "The Case for the Nisei" that included the court's opinions of the majority and minority jurists.

The 20-minute talk covered his experiences over the past decade with the wartime internment cases that he described were "the most fulfilling and exciting" and proceeded to weave them from a historical perspective as "movements for social change."

While the inspiring story of the redress movement is a time for celebration, Irons reminded that other movements against injustice need support, such as the internal exiles within U.S. (the homeless, community of gays and lesbians) and exiles from their homelands in Palestine, El Salvador and those in South America.

He also suggested there was a "white noose of suburban segregation around the necks of the black urban underclass has created a form of concentration camps that breeds crime, drug use and despair."

Cressey Nakagawa, in announcing Ralph Neas as winner of the Edison Uno Civil Rights Award, but who regrettably wired his regrets in not being able to come to accept the honors personally, assured the presentation would be made shortly.

Some 250 delegates, boosters and guests were present. Kimiko Fukuda was mistress of ceremonies. Welcome by convention board chair Robert Ito, the pledge of allegiance led by San Diego executive director Masuaki Hironaka, invocation by the Rev. Tom Fujita of Ocean View United Church of Christ prefaced the greetings which followed from:

Former Calif. Assemblyman Floyd Mori:

Mt. Olympus JACLer Elected to Nat'l Board as V.P. for Public Affairs

By Harry K. Honda

SAN DIEGO — Remembered as "a most staunch JACL supporter" by National JACL Board and staff members when he was in public service in the 1970s, former Democratic California Assemblyman S. Floyd Mori was elected to the 1990-92 national board as vice president / public affairs, succeeding Cherry Kinoshita of Seattle.

Mori, 51, currently serving his second term as Mt. Olympus JACL president, is involved in international business, akin to his last political appointment as director of the State Office of International Trade. He had just lost his re-election bid to a Republican in 1980 when he was appointed by Gov. Jerry Brown to the trade post. He initiated the first California state trade fair and exhibition in Tokyo in 1982. He also initiated the first Western Governors' conference on international trade the same year.

While a state assemblyman (1975-1980), Mori spearheaded the campaign to eliminate the 5 ft.-6 minimum for California Highway Patrol officers. He was also encouraging Japanese companies to make capital inroads into California because of the favorable dollar-yen exchange rate.

An economics instructor for 10 years at Chabot College, He also was elected councilman and mayor of Pleasanton in Alameda County.

Mori is also active in Asian American, political and service organizations.

SAN DIEGO — Some 400 heavy canvas tote bags emblazoned with the blue-green 1990 JACL convention logo and the royal blue Union Bank of California logo on the outside were ready for delegates registering during the week of June 17 - 23 at the San Diego Princess Resort.

It was filled with information of immediate use to the visitors—how to get around San Diego on its popular red trolley to the Tijuana border, a purse flashlight from Pacific Gas & Electric, where to eat in nearby Pacific Beach and discount come-ons for souvenir items.

Details for those registered for convention events (which were also carried on the hotel TV announcement channel), JACL-Blue Shield's pen, its current benefits and a flyer on international medical services, the 60-page JACL-LEC biennial report and its recent issue of the Redress Monitor featuring a front-page Tom Kometani's story and picture that ran in the (New Jersey) Courier News and the impressive 88-page "Wave of the Future" JACL Convention souvenir booklet—a newsy, ad-packed and message-laden offering that was edited by an eight-member staff of Arthur Nishioka, Masato Ozakawa, Robert Ito, Don Estes, Tom Ozaki, Gary Hamada, Gloria Nishioka and Marleen Kawahara.

Peruvian Nikkei in Little Tokyo Pray for Fujimori's Success as El Presidente

By Takeshi Nakayama

Rafu Shimpō

LOS ANGELES — Peruvians of Japanese descent living in Southern California were happy that Alberto Fujimori was victorious in Peru's presidential election, but they were apprehensive about the president-elect's ability to change the situation in that troubled South American nation.

"The feelings I have right now are very complicated," said Alejandro Nakada, president of the local Peru Nisei Association. "I have mixed feelings. On one hand, I'm excited about the victory, proud that a Peruvian Nisei was elected president. But on the other hand, we (Peruvian Nisei in Los Angeles) are worried about his chances to succeed, whether he can pull Peru out of this terrible situation, with its economic crisis, terrorism and cocaine problems."

Before the election, many Japanese Peruvians, including Nakada, didn't want Fujimori to win. The Peruvian situation was bad, and if Fujimori won and failed in his attempts to solve that nation's overwhelming problems, they feared the Japanese Peruvians might get the blame. There were some racial incidents against Peruvians of Japanese ancestry reported in the Peruvian media a few months ago: some Japanese Peruvians were refused service at a Lima restaurant, and in other incidents the homes of Nikkei were stoned.

"I look at the reality of the situation and I worry," Nakada said. "But now that he's elected, all Peruvian Nisei here are pulling for him to succeed."

Immigrating from Lima to the United States as a student 27 years ago, he found a job and decided to stay here. "The economic situation in Peru really deteriorated the last 12 years," said Nakada, production manager at Fishing. "I thought of going back but I decided to stay here because of the 2,000 percent a year inflation and the 40 percent full employment."

Martha Tamashiro, another Peruvian Nisei expressed similar sentiments. "Being Nikkei, there is an individual pride in being of the same blood, Peru Japanese. I say congratulations and hope he will be successful in performing his job. It will be a very tremendous job to carry on his shoulders. There are so many things against any president in Peru. But this is special because there is a Nikkei involved. He will require a lot of luck, and he will have to be ingenious to be victorious in government."

She added, "It's very hard to determine what kind of government he will lead in Peru. Personally, I will appeal to his Japanese side—hard work, honesty and the gambare spirit—that's all we can rely on. I hope he will make some sort of mark to benefit the Peruvian people."

Tamashiro thought most Nikkei in Peru supported Fujimori's opponent, Mario Vargas Llosa, in the primary election, "because most Japanese there are in the top 15 percent economically. Many own businesses or industries. Fujimori had said that his opponent's plan to privatize most banks and large businesses would not be beneficial to low-income people. The margin was about 90-10 in favor of Vargas Llosa, then."

"But many Nikkei were convinced after the primary to vote for Fujimori, many were converted," she noted. "But anyone elected president would have a tough time. The country is in shambles—high inflation, no electricity after 5 p.m., earthquake damage."

Tamashiro, who left Peru for the United States "many years ago," still maintains close ties with Peru. "I am very much concerned with the problems in Peru. My brother is an orthopedic surgeon in Lima and my sister and her husband run a family business there. I have many relatives in Peru."

She said Japanese Peruvians had faced active racial discrimination and accusations from the government during World War II, but when she was growing up after the war, there was not much discrimination. "Japanese quickly got into the mainstream and are now higher up than most Peruvians economically and educationally."

She noted that the Lima Japanese Community Center is older than the one here in Los Angeles, and that the Peruvian government compensated the Japanese community for land which was seized and expropriated during the war by giving the Nikkei exchange land as reparations. Today, a stadium, gymnasium and offices occupy the land. Tamashiro estimated that there are 3,000 Peruvians of Japanese ancestry in the Los Angeles area.

Two former JACL chapter presidents, Dr. Luis Kobashi, Santa Ana physician, and Luis Yamakawa, Los Angeles mechanical engineer, both hail from Peru.

Fujimori's Uncle in Kumamoto-ken Celebrates; Kaifu Extends Best Wishes

From Wire Reports

TOKYO—Barrels of saké were hammered open amid cheers of banzai and a Peruvian flag was hoisted June 11 (Monday) in Kawachi, Kumamoto-ken, the ancestral home of Alberto Fujimori, who was elected president.

School children were given a day off in the small agricultural town where his parents were born and poured into the streets to wave flags in celebration. News was also broadcast over the town's public address system.

Kawachi, known for its mikan—mandarin oranges, is a town of about 8,500 on the west coast of Kumamoto-ken, 575 miles southwest of Tokyo.

Uncle Leads in Celebration

Fujimori's uncle, Tomio Imoto, a 66-year-old farmer, gave a brief victory speech before a crowd of about 50 and thanked the town's mayor and the folks for supporting his nephew. "He has won at last," Imoto cheered as he broke open the barrel and led with banzai three times.

Kawachi Mayor Shunji Shimazu extended his congratulations: "All of us from Kawachi-machi, his parents' hometown, would like to celebrate the birth of the administration of Mr. Alberto Fujimori."

Town spokesman Kunihiro Honda added the "results indicate Peru is more internationalized because its people voted for a second generation Japanese as president of the nation" and said Fujimori's victory could make the Japanese people reconsider its own immigration policy.

Prime Minister Kaifu Says

Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu congratulated Fujimori on his election: "I extend my hearty congratulations to the president-elect, chosen by the public. I hope the president-elect will summon public will and strive to overcome the mounting difficulties and achieve economic reconstruction."

Deputy government spokesman Nobuo Ishihara, meanwhile, said Japan would not take special measures to provide economic assistance to Peru "on grounds that a Japanese descendant has won (the presidential election)."

The government had said it would consider new financial aid to Peru following the election, but it was not linked to Fujimori's victory. "We want to congratulate whoever wins the election," a Foreign Ministry official said. Between 1984 and 1988, Japan sent $144.6 billion in aid, according to the Foreign Office.

People in Kawachi-machi are saying Japan should extend financial support to reconstruct Peru, which has a $20 billion foreign debt. Imoto said, "I think what we Japanese can do for Peru now is to give economic support. And I sincerely hope Fujimori will improve Peru's condition as close to Japan's as possible during his five-year term as president."

Imoto added the last time he saw Fujimori was in 1972 when he visited Japan. (The president-elect speaks Spanish, Japanese and English.) Fujimori's father had emigrated to Peru in 1934 and worked as a tailor and night foreman in Lima.

Minorities Still Locked Out of Editorial Jobs in U.S. Newspapers, ANPA Finds

WASHINGTON, D.C. — According to a survey by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the U.S. daily newspapers increased the number of minority and women employees by two percent each from 1988, but the number of minorities in editorial-news jobs has not risen.

The group did a similar survey two years ago and found that 16 percent of the staff were minorities and 37 percent were women. The 1990 survey upped those totals to 18 and 39 percent, respectively. The survey was taken on the basis of 604 responses from 566 markets across the country.

The survey covers employment statistics in eight newspaper departments—accounting/finance, advertising, circulation, general management and administration, information systems and services, news/editorial, marketing/promotion/research, and production.

It also provides information on newspaper recruitment programs and their effectiveness in increasing minority and female employment.

Other findings by the survey included the fact that minorities represent 22 percent of the total U.S. civilian workforce as compared to 18 percent of the newspaper industry workforce. Minority women make up seven percent of the newspaper industry workforce.

The greatest number of newspaper minority employees are located in the circulation department. Twenty-five percent of employed in this area, a six percent increase since 1988. General management and administration amount to 21 percent and production 21 percent represent the next highest proportion of minorities.

Only five percent of the newspaper executives and managers in news and editorial were minority, including just one percent Asian. Asians made up three percent of accounting/finance; one percent in advertising; one percent in circulation; one percent in general management and administration; two percent in information systems and services; two percent marketing/promotion/research; and one percent of production.

Thirty-six percent of responding newspapers have an active voluntary affirmative action plan in effect, a drop of two percent from 1988.

Both surveys were conducted by Bel-den Associates of Dallas.

Cal Poly Pomona, Japan Design School Sign Exchange Agreement

POMONA, Calif. — Cal Poly Pomona and the Kyushu Institute of Design (K.I.D.) in Japan have signed an agreement providing for academic exchanges between the two institutions.

The pact was signed on June 7 by Cal Poly President Hugh O. La Bounty and Dr. Yoshinori Ando, president of K.I.D. The agreement calls for the exchange of educational and academic research materials and data, joint research, and an exchange of scholars and students.

"The significance of this agreement is to formally establish ties that will assist students or faculty who may wish to apply for fellowships or scholarships and foreign study," said Professor Uesugi of Cal Poly's department of landscape architecture. "This will have an impact on data exchanges, particularly environmental programs—air and water pollution—and other global issues."

"The timing for this agreement is excellent," said Uesugi. "The objectives of the exchange program aim to broaden the educational and academic goals of Cal Poly toward the Pacific Rim."

Resolution 13

A major step was taken at last week's national JACL convention to heal a sore that has festered for nearly a half century in the Japanese American community. That was adoption, unanimously, of Resolution 13 submitted by the Seattle chapter in place of the controversial Resolution 7 presented by the same chapter two years earlier.

The highlight of Resolution 13, and the conclusion of the Presidential Select Committee's report on the study of Japanese American history required by Resolution 7, appear elsewhere in this newspaper. They should be read carefully.

In essence, both documents found that the evacuation and detention of Japanese Americans in the early days of World War II was a gross violation of their Constitutional rights. The Congressional Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians reached the same conclusion, and that was the basis for an official apology by Congress and President Reagan, and the start of the Redress process.

Resolution 13 went further. It found that the Japanese Americans reacted in a variety of ways. The majority cooperated with the government to demonstrate their loyalty and thus underscore the injustice being done them. With a few singular exceptions, everyone accepted removal from homes when the government asserted—falsely, it turned out later—it was a military necessity. The cooperation extended to military service which Japanese Americans performed with great valor and distinction.

But a small minority—only several hundred compared to the 33,000 who enlisted—refused induction. Most of this minority professed loyalty to the United States but insisted, as a matter of conscience, they had no obligation to serve so long as their Constitutional guarantees were being violated.

This was their way of defending their civil rights. Under the law, they paid the penalty for violation of Selective Service regulations, which was imprisonment. Inevitably, they came under criticism by those who believed patriotism in wartime should be demonstrated by cooperating with government, and feared that refusal to serve endangered the cooperative majority.

Resolution 13 recognizes and honors the sacrifice of those who served in uniform. It also asserts that loyalty can be manifested by "praiseworthy and admirable acts" other than military service. By adopting the resolution, JACL apologizes for "pain or bitterness caused by its failure to recognize this group as patriotic Americans," and accords them "honor and respect."

It is likely that many within the Japanese American community will gag over some provisions of Resolution 13. Some believe it cheapens the sacrifice of those who chose to cooperate with their government despite its obvious injustice, intending to make their point at a more opportune time.

The resolution would not have been approved 30 or 40 years ago when feelings lay closer to the surface, or even two years ago when its intent was not clearly understood. But standards and perceptions change. This year JACL in convention assembled approved Resolution 13 unanimously. Let the healing begin.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Good Questions

I am disturbed about the editorial position you have taken with regard to affirmative action (P.C., Feb. 16, 1990).

Affirmative action laws have been an important part of civil rights legislation directed toward relieving the harmful effects of generations of discrimination. In this process, groups of people experience what they feel is "reverse discrimination," i.e., proportionately fewer whites at UC Berkeley than in the surrounding population.

I find an inconsistency with your stand on affirmative action, and your stand on redress. One of the chief objections to redress has been:

Granted, Japanese Americans were victims of racial discrimination, but why do today's taxpayers have to pay for the actions of our government years ago?

Redress asks today's taxpayer to pay for redressing a past injustice. Affirmative action requires certain people today to accept the brunt of redressing past injustices.

How can you support one and not the other, and assuming you are interested in redressing past discrimination in employment, entry into college, etc., how do you propose this be done?

A World of Difference

Frank Wada of Pingree, Idaho, called the other night about something or other and in passing he shared the intelligence that his son, Albert, has planted 4,000 acres of potatoes and more than 4,000 acres of various grains. I think I have written on previous occasions about Albert Wada's staggeringly large scale farming operations, but I never cease to be amazed by the idea of planting, tending and harvesting what, according to my calculator, amounts to six and a quarter square miles of spuds.

That reminded me of something I heard on a recent trip to Japan. We were discussing Japanese reluctance to import more American rice. One of the reasons given was that imports would injure the Japanese farmer.

"Japanese farmer, hell," remarked a fellow. "We are now in the era of san-chan agriculture. Rice farms are tended by the three-chans—ji-chan (Grandpa), ba-chan (Grandma), and ka-chan (Mom), while the man of the family is away working in a factory. With the machinery available these days, you don't need a lot of manpower to work a two-acre farm."

The difference between Japan and the U.S. was brought home in another area, namely juvenile delinquency. There was a story in the English language Daily Yomiuri about 11 third-year high school students being kicked out of school for smoking. Smoking not pot or crack, but tobacco.

Eventually nine of them were allowed back in school because of parental protests and because the girls were remorseful. The other two were not reinstated because they were caught smoking on a school trip to South Korea after they had signed a pledge not to engage in "misconduct."

I've heard of American high schools where smoking rooms are set aside for students who feel the need for the stimulation of nicotine between classes.

Yes, I know stereotypes are bad, but what follows was told in Japan in good-natured jest and I don't think it would hurt anybody if I repeated it.

It has to do with stereotypes about international characteristics that are said to be rare, as follows: German sense of humor. English gastronomy. French modesty. Italian discipline. Spanish exactitude. Greek transparency. Japanese individualism. American shyness.

These, of course, are "never happen" stereotypes, best repeated with a wry and disarming grin. The charm of true stereotypes, if they aren't malicious, is that they contain an element of truth. But I must suggest that individualistic Japanese and shy Americans are the exception rather than the rule. Watch them sometime.

In Wake of the Incident at La Crosse, Wisconsin

Once again, Asians have become victims of violence directed against them solely because of their race. This time the victims, Taro Imamura and Yasushi Kikuchi, were Japanese students at the University of Wisconsin in La Crosse. They were beaten severely on the early morning of April 22, by a gang of four white men in downtown La Crosse. Two have been charged with battery in the incident. The victims, while injured, survived. Thankfully.

They might have been dead. Like Vincent Chin, Jim Loo, Thong Hy Huynh, the five Stockton Southeast Asian schoolchildren and others before them; they are the victims of the rising tide of anti-Asian violence in America. These racist incidents are not isolated. The facts sound strikingly similar to previous attacks. As in the other cases, the attackers failed to distinguish or care that their victims were not of the ethnicity they originally presumed. Their own words summed up their motivation, "Because we hate gooks."

As second, third and fourth generation Japanese Americans, the fact that these victims happened to be of our own ethnicity should serve as a chilling reminder: No matter how long we have lived and raised our families in this country, there are some that believe the American dream is an exclusive one that is not open to us because of our race. Even the right to live can be denied one who is not white. It also reminds us that, despite our differences, our future and our present is tied inextricably to our Asian American neighbors. Our unity can provide some hope in the face of this growing hostility.

But, even in this incident there is hope. Two white women, not knowing either the attackers or the attacked, saw the incident and risked their own safety by attempting to intervene and then tried to help the victims. Their courage in the face of this senseless violence is in the highest ideals of this country. And they serve as models to us all: only by taking risks and standing up against racism and hatred can we begin to fight back against this ugliness that threatens to swallow us all.

Nor must we wait for another killing or beating to occur. Every racist image of invading yellow immigrants or of sneaky and belligerent Japanese businesspeople adds to the venom that results in this violence. Every ad or article that utilizes negative racial images to promote a product or idea fans the flames of intolerance that culminate in hate crimes. We must respond strongly and positively to these images, just as we respond to the crimes themselves.

I have met with the Department of Justice and asked them to be aware of this growing phenomenon. And I have asked for federal civil rights prosecution of the killers of Jim Loo in North Carolina. We should work on the local level for strong state civil rights laws that will send a special message that crimes based on racial, ethnic or religious intolerance will receive special attention and special penalties. Only in this way can we send a message that, in this country, racial violence will no longer be tolerated.

On behalf of the JACL, my sincere concern goes out to the two young students. I ask you not to assume that all Americans bear such hate and anger against those of our race. And to the people of Wisconsin, please, see that these violent individuals receive the fullest punishment under the law.

Barry Saiki of Tokyo Surprised at Convention With Sapphire Pin

SAN DIEGO — Barry Saiki, founder of the Japan JACL chapter ten years ago, was surprised Monday night at the Convention JACL Award Banquet with a presentation of the Sapphire Pin for his distinguished tenure with the JACL.

A retired army intelligence officer who remained in Japan to engage in public relations work, he is ending some 30 years overseas to retire this summer and return to the states. The origami-folding wizard (you can tell he was in the room by the paper menagerie of cranes, peacocks, horses, etc., scattered about) revealed he plans to retire in Stockton, where he grew up before the war.

Saiki has been a P.C. guest columnist for the several decades commenting and reporting on the Nisei in Japan.

sey), president, Drew University, from Grant Ujifusa; William Marutani (a member of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians) in absentia from Cressey Nakagawa; Angus Macbeth, CWRIC special counsel, from Cherry Kinoshita; 442nd veteran Rudy Tokiwa of San Jose, Calif., from Art Morimitsu; the late Minoru Yasui of Denver from Gene Takamine; and Jerry Enomoto from Molly Fujioka.

All current JACL-LEC board members participated as presenters. Tom Kometani read two poems penned by Sen. Matsunaga when he was a combat officer in the 100th Infantry during World War II. Wakamatsu announced a $100,000 contribution was being made to the Pacific Peace Foundation, P.O. Box 1038, Honolulu, HI 96808, established by the senator's family in his memory.

The Senate legislative schedule that day prevented the two U.S. senators to be present. In his message to the convention, Inouye noted:

"We are now at the end of a long and most painful process. At long last, those who suffered terrible indignities at the hand of the United States will receive an acknowledgement by our country of its transgression. I know that such an apology and token payment (of $20,000) will not fully recompense those who lost their liberty, property, freedom and equal protection without due process of law.

"The enactment of reparations legislation should serve as a reminder of a gross injustice that occurred in time of national emergency, but it should also remind us of the enduring strength of our democracy—a system that can recognize wrongdoing and take steps to ensure that it is not repeated."

The LEC presentations ceremoniously concluded with rendition of the "JACL Hymn" by Kiku Goh of Los Angeles, and a shakuhachi pastoral by Jonathan Crick, also of Los Angeles.

The octagonal ceramic piece was encased in boxes made of kiri (paulownia), designed and constructed by Scott Karins with Rinban Keizo Norimoto of the Fresno Buddhist Church inscribing the lid with calligraphy, Katsu, victory. The committee gratefully acknowledged:

The Rev. Akio Miyaji of the Buddhist Temple of San Diego gave the invocation and benediction. Dance music by the Devocean concluded the festivities. Over 450 attended the dinner, according to banquet co-chair Elizabeth Yamada and Dr. Mitsuo Tomita.

REPORT OF THE PRESIDENTIAL SELECT COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTION 7 TO THE JACL NATIONAL COUNCIL

Accepted by JACL National Council
20 June 1990

Following are highlights from the Report of the Presidential Select Committee on Resolution No. 7, accepted in full at the 31st Biennial Convention of the JACL.

Introduction—In 1988, Seattle JACL presented Resolution No. 7 to the National Council. The resolution asked "that the JACL recognize that a number of our community citizens (No-No Boys) were injured by persons acting individually and in the name of the JACL and that the JACL apologize for their injuries, pain and injustice borne by them."

The National Council, after much debate, referred the issue to a Presidential Select Committee, which would report to the council at the 1990 convention. The committee hired a researcher to consult current papers and publications, JACL archives, government documents and oral history collections and to present all pertinent information to the committee.

Committee members were JACL National President Cressey Nakagawa, Toaru Ishiyama, Lillian Kimura, Marilyn Hall Patel and Homer Yasui.

Historical Context—Nisei were born into a world of racial exclusion, yet were eager to assimilate into American society. For the JACL, "loyalty" and "patriotism" were key elements in defining the organization.

President Franklin Roosevelt was already planning a concentration camp for Japanese Americans as early as 1936, five years before Pearl Harbor.

Stand Regarding Evacuation—In the months following Pearl Harbor, JACL leaders met with state and federal government officials, protesting forced evacuation on the basis of race, but agreeing to cooperate if such evacuation was deemed a military necessity. When the internment orders came down, JACLers provided such services as disseminating information (where to report, what to bring), furnishing interpreters, and donating food, clothing and money.

No-No's and Draft Resisters—Early in 1943, the U.S. Army created a special combat regiment of Nisei volunteers. Loyalty for Nisei males of military age was to be determined through a loyalty questionnaire.

At the same time, the WRA decided to speed up its program of relocating evacuees and "adopted" the Army's loyalty questionnaire to create the Application for Leave Clearance for Nisei females and all Issei.

Question 27 of the WRA form asked whether the applicant was willing to serve in American combat forces. Question 28 asked all internees to forswear allegiance to Japan.

Issei, in particular, were caught in a nightmare. They did not wish to be forced out of camp in the middle of the war; they could not agree to fight, given their age; and they would become stateless if they renounced affiliation with Japan.

The No-No Boys were those who answered "no" to both Questions 27 and 28. Most were considered "disloyal" by the government and segregated in Tule Lake. Among the Yes-Yes group were the resisters, who demanded the restoration of their rights before induction into military service.

JACL Actions—JACL sought clarification of Question 28, which the WRA changed to eliminate reference to the emperor. JACL welcomed the opportunity to demonstrate loyalty by serving in the armed forces. The organization suspended all members who answered no-no.

JACL was an early and consistent advocate for segregating no-no's, troublemakers, those released from Department of Justice camps, professional gamblers, pro-Japan Kibei, and others.

JACL leaders held strongly negative views about the draft resistance, and expressed them through letters to the WRA and editorials and columns in the Pacific Citizen. They felt that charges of sedition would undermine the heroism of the 442nd RCT and 100th Battalion and that the stigma of "draft dodger" would haunt the Nisei forever.

Min Yasui and Joe Grant Masaoka, who visited the Cheyenne County Jail to persuade the draft resisters to reconsider their stand, did not feel that the resisters were disloyal or seditious, only ill advised.

There is no evidence that JACL asked the ACLU to refuse legal assistance the Heart Mountain resisters.

In the time following the attack on Pearl Harbor and continuing until the end of the war, Japanese Americans were forced to react to intense and unpredictable pressures created by the actions of the United States government. Divisions were created in the community that have never been healed.

With the hindsight afforded by history, it is all too easy to look back on those times and the difficult choices thrust upon ordinary people, and sit in judgment or assess blame as to those choices. The U.S. government has finally admitted its error in forcing those choices and creating the divisions in the community. Each person who lived through those times, making decisions in response to the crisis, has vivid memories of the experience. Later generations and those outside the community, however, are largely unfamiliar with the uncertainties of the time, and complex community pressures and positions and the actions taken by various groups and individuals, including the Japanese American Citizens League. This report is intended to add to the knowledge of that time and the role of the JACL in those events.

The task presented to this Presidential Select Committee was to investigate through research, review and present whatever documented facts there may be covering the issues raised by Resolution No. 7. More specifically, the Committee was to determine what policies the JACL adopted on the issues raised by Resolution No. 7 and the actions JACL took to implement such policies, if any.

The JACL did not have complete control over the community or over the decisions of the time. The organization did adopt a policy of cooperation. The community impact of their decisions, however, and the leadership roles that they voluntarily assumed, placed a heavy responsibility upon the JACL leadership to act in the community's best interests.

Disagreement over their choices was and is inevitable. Sometimes, it is not clear whether an individual's actions were taken while wearing the mantle of the JACL or whether an individual's actions were an expression of her or his private views. But, especially as an officer or staff person, and they acted in a way that affected others; they either knew or should have known that even expressly individual acts would be interpreted as JACL's and would have community impact.

An organization such as the JACL has a responsibility to protect the members of its community. For its part, and in the context of the times, JACL's values of patriotism and loyalty almost demanded cooperation with the government. A current similar circumstance would insist that the organization hold the government to its constitutional commitments and, by that standard, it can be concluded that the JACL leadership of that day could have protested.

Every individual's view of that time will be colored by his or her unique perspectives. This report is for the purpose of understanding history and not for the purpose of placing blame or escaping it. It is important that we try to understand and appreciate positions and actions taken by all involved. Based upon its findings, the Presidential Select Committee concludes and recommends that the National Council of the JACL appropriately acknowledges that those so-called draft resisters who clearly professed their loyalty to America and were otherwise willing to serve in the armed forces of the United States, but for the deprivation of their constitutional rights by internment in America's concentration camps, were honorable and loyal Americans who fought for the same constitutional rights as those Japanese American men who were then in active service in the defense of this country.

It is important to learn from our experience. It is important to understand why government failed in 1942 and succeeded in 1988 to provide redress. As an organization, we must always stand vigilant. We must expend all energy and resource to defend constitutional rights. In 1942 too many organizations and individuals stood silent in the face of a human and constitutional tragedy. Today, we must cultivate our organizational and political relationships while encouraging and supporting the advancement of Japanese Americans to public office and positions of influence in public policy. In 1942, the half century of pervasive racism and intolerance was a major factor which led to the internment. Today, intolerance continues within society necessitating programs of prejudice reduction and the dissemination of information on the Japanese American experience for the purpose of creating understanding. The Japanese American community is what it is due to the cumulative effect of our history in this country and both because of and in spite of the decisions of the JACL and of other groups and of individuals at that time. Where we are going and whether we will survive as a community will depend upon our ability to face that history and move beyond it so that we may focus together on the challenges of the future.

Controversy May Sink 80-Ft. Japanese Sub at Pearl Harbor Twice

HONOLULU — The U.S. Park Service is expected to decide soon whether to ship a historic relic of WWII to Hawaii in time for the 50th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor, reports the Honolulu Star-Bulletin & Advertiser.

A decision about the 80-foot Japanese submarine was delayed because of misinformed protests by several chapters of the Veterans of Foreign Wars which wrongly believed that the midget sub would be anchored over the sunken battleship, USS Arizona.

The vessel was one of five midget subs that took part in the attack on the American naval base on Dec. 7, 1941. It was sunk in action by a U.S. destroyer as it attempted to sneak into Pearl Harbor and became the No. 1 war trophy as part of a warbond drive, raising millions of dollars. It has since languished in various storage areas since the war.

Calif. Assembly Passes Anti-Dropout Bill to Aid Minority Prep Students

SACRAMENTO — Legislation aimed at reducing the high drop-out rates among Asian immigrant, Black and Latino students won approval from the State Assembly on June 11, 41-30.

About 48% of Latino, 45% of African-American and half of Filipino and Southeast Asian immigrant students drop out of school.

Assembly Bill 4257, authored by Oakland Assemblyman Tom Bates provides matching grants to multi-cultural university student groups for tutoring/mentoring programs aimed at Black, Latino, Asian and other high drop-out groups.

It is similar to the successful "Break The Cycle" program between U.C. Berkeley and the Berkeley Public Schools.

The bill includes $145,000 in matching grants to university-based student groups to mentor and tutor low-income high school students in predominantly Asian immigrant, Latino, and African-American school populations.

Denver Woman Wins Top Benefit Drawing Prize

DENVER — June Inuzuka, was the winner of the $2,000 first prize in the annual benefit drawing held for the Japanese Retirement Home by Friends of the JRH, the support organization.

Winner of the second prize, a complete Kenwood stereo system, donated by the Kenwood USA Corp., was M. Nakamura, a worker at Keiro Convalescent Home, a sister facility.

Third prize of $1,000 was won by Julie Webster Velt of Long Beach and the fourth prize, a camcorder, went to Douglas Uyeki of Fresno.

Elsie Yumi of Gardena won the fifth prize, a 45-piece set of Mikasa dinnerware which was donated by the company.

300 Minority Attorneys, Judges Hold Convention

By Alvina Lew

LOS ANGELES — The 1990 Statewide Minority Attorney Conference was held at the Sheraton Long Beach Hotel, June 9. Three hundred minority lawyers and judges from all over California participated—some as panelists, keynote speakers and attendees.

A whole range of topics was discussed—some which were pertinent to minority lawyers and others could apply to lawyers in general. Topics included: California Minority Counsel Program; Career Alternatives; Marketing Techniques for the Small Firm and Solo Practitioner; Mainstream Minorities—Myth or Reality? The Future Role of the Minority Bar; Dollars vs. Pro Bono; Discipline—An Issue for the Minority Attorney; Being Civilized in a Sometimes Uncivilized Profession; and The Partnership Track - To Be or Not To Be.
