Sex, power, murder—the Japanese? Rising Sun, the best-selling novel by Michael Crichton, about the murder of a call girl on the boardroom table of a Japanese company in Los-Angeles has been the focus of virulent criticism within the Japanese American community. In its educational workbook on the

"Buy American" campaigns, JACL, says the novel is an exercise in Japan bashing and it portrays Japan as racist." But is it? In a Pacific Citizen interview, Crichton said his novel is not about Japan-bashing, but an examination See RISING/page 7

The movie

Rising Sun, the movie, is scheduled to begin filming this month with Right Stuff director Phillip Kaufman, and starring Sean Connery, Wesley Snipes, and Tia Carrere Casting calls for Asian American actors have been advertised in newspapers. Twentieth Century Fox reportedly paid author Michael Crichton $1 million for the rights to the movie, two-thirds of what he received for his last novel, Jurassic Park.

Some reactions to the novel . . .

How should Japanese Americans react to Rising Sun? In this era of political correctness, is it wrong

Sun? In this era of political correctness, is it wrong to criticize Japan or is the issue really the stereotyping of an entire culture?

Cressey Nakagawa, JACI. national president, said he read Rizing Sun because he was curious that reviews had mentioned that Crichton went to outside sources to research the book. Nakagawa criticized the book for presenting sone-sided negative view of U.S.-Japan relations.

"Crichton takes the common street understanding of U.S.-Japan relations and creates characters that represent a stereotyped view of U.S.-Japan relations," said Nakagawa.

"Crichton only picks out the negative in the relationship. It's tantamount to racism in a novel relationship. It's tantamount to racism in a novel relationship. It's tantamount to racism in a novel that tries to show real people, said Nakagawa. The JACL president complained that Crichton's novel, by only portraying Japanese nationals, doesn't present a rounded perspective on Japanese in America. "From the novel, I don't know how you could make the distinction between Japanese and Japanese Americans," said Nakagawa

Calling the novel 'intellectu-ally dishonest,' Nakagawa dis-agreed with Crichton's definitions of Japanese terms like keiretsu and Crichton's assertion that the novel is a discussion of revisionist doctrine. Nakagawa drew the parallel to Frank Capra's propaganda films during World War H. "There is no attempt to qualify criticisms of Japan."

While actor George Takei agrees that the book may present problems for Japanese Americans, he also believes it shouldn't be suming the novel a "spine-tingling whodunnit," Takei said, "Crichton is talking about a lot of legitimate issues that need to be considered

President Bush names 7 Nikkei to Civil Liberties board

WASHINGTON, D.C.—President Bush announced May 20 his intention to nominate the following individuals to be members of the Civil Liberties Public Education Pund Board of Directors. Established by public law in 1988, the purpose of the fund is to increase public understanding of U.S. citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry who were executed. ancestry who were evacuated, relocated or interned without due process of law in 1942. JACL hopeful about JA appointments to group

WASHINGTON, D.C.— The JACL is hopeful that President Bush's appointment of seven Japanese Americans to the Civil Liberties Public Education Fund Board of Di-rectors signifies a change in the administration's position

the administration's position on this issue.

The education component of the act was recommended in the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians report, Personal Justice Denied. The administration recently requested that this component be eliminated from the act. The JACL hopes that the appointment of the board of directors is an indication that President Bush is now com-mitted to carrying out all aspects of the act.

"Given the President's earlier opposition to funding the education fund, we view these appointments as a signal that the administration is reconsidering its position," said Cressey Nakagawa, JACL national president. Dennis Hayashi, JACL national director, noted, The President has announced only seven names for the nine-member board. We hope that women will be considered for appointment to the board to

Mineta angry at Bush; says move is political

WASHINGTON, D.C.— Rep. Norman Y. Mineta, (D-Calif.) lead sponsor of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, blasted President Bush May 28 for playing election-year-politics with redress for Americans of Japanese ancestry interned by the U.S. government during the World War II.

Mineta said that President Bush has named prominent Japanese Americans to a key redress-related advisory board while at the same time whing to eliminate the very same advisory board from the federal budget and thereby break a key trust with Japa

ness Americans.
Mineta was referring to Bush-authorized legislation (HR 4570) that would end redress programs prematurely, and to the President's May 20th nomination of seven members of the Civil Liberties Public Education Fund
Board of Directors. Although Board of Directors. Although the board cannot legally begin its work until a year after the November 1992, elections, Mineta said that the President is clearly hoping to gain political advantage by nam-ing board members now, just before the California primary.

Intimate Stranger is the bittersweet journey of Joseph Cussuto (standing) who lived many lives—Jewish, Palestinian, Egyptian, American and Japanese. The documentary explores a man who, at the cost of his own family relationships, came to find and identify meaning in the Japanese culture. The film, airing June 22 on PBS nationally, brings freshness to the documentary look and sound by using quick cuts, fisahes and fast-moving dialogue and clever conventions such as the staccate sound of a click-clacking typewriter to switch from frame to frame. Director Jana Berliner, Cassuto's grandson, uses family dialogue and the voices of many of his friends, colleagues and businessmen from Japan to define his grandfather's life and career in the Japan of the early part of the twentieth-century.

California civil rights bill passes Assembly

SANFRANCISCO-A.B. 3825 SANFRANCISCO—A.B. 3825, the California Civil Rights Res-toration Actof 1992, was narrowly passed by the State Assembly yesterday by a vote of 41 to 33. The omnibus bill was introduced by Assembly Speaker Willie Brown (D-San Francisco).

"We are very pleased that the Assembly recognized the impor-tance of this bill in addressing injustice and discrimination," said Dennis Hayashi, JACL national director and member of the steering committee which assisted in the formulation of the bill. "This legislation is sorely needed behave dismantled and eroded civil rights protections. A.B. 3825 is a step forward.

in a recent press conference at the State Capitol and attended by Patty Wada, NCWNP regional director, and Joy Morimoto, JACL public information officer, Brown noted that the act was introduced long before the recent Los Angelong before, the recent Los Ange-les riots, but was a first step in addressing the kinds of injustices which fueled the rage exhibited in Los Angeles and other cities. Supporters spoke of the measure as a nonviolent legal mechanism to redress the injustices of job and housing discrimination and sexual nent.

The press conference focused primarily on the issue of hate crimes as the most extreme form of racism and discrimination in society. Speaking on behalf of JACL, Morimoto said, "It does not

Koreans, blacks get together at symposium

By HARRY K. HONDA Editor emeritus

LOS ANGELES—Leaders from the local Korean and African American communities explored and pondered together the events that gave Los Angeles world-wide attention when the rioting broke out April 29 in wake of the Rodney King verdict during a two-day symposium held May 22-23 at the Cal State L.A. campus.

CSULA President, James Rosser, in welcoming the 100-plus participants, said, "Rebuilding is a constant thing, striving to a higher understanding of the culnigner understanding of the cul-tural, social and economic infra-structure." That was the charge and framework for the four pan-els: (1) Roots of the Problem, (2) Similarities and Differences, (3) Current Issues, and (4) Resolu-tions and Alliance.

In opening remarks, Dr. Eui-Young Yu, director of the Insti-tute for Asian American and Pa-cific Asian Studies at CSULA, pointed out that the symposium had been planned (and funded by the Korean Cultural Center) Fong before the riots, since it was apparent over the previous years that "we need to know each other; now, we need to help rebuild our

The sociology professor, who was on the scene the first day the Korean American businesses and shops were being looted and burned and then managed to raise $2 million in emergency relief funds, added that as the first symposium of its kind, "Those of us in the ivory tower cannot do it allbut through dialogue we we can get started and establish this hu-man connection."

George Umezawa, facilitator at the closing panel, said that as a Japanese American Sansei, he rned much about the Korean s and their struggles. He felt that the minority can control their destiny through the vote. The symposium was "exciting to behold, for this gathering is now more important in the context of building a true coalition on cam-pus and in the community." There being no simple solution, Kim urged, "We need to get our kind in (political) offices," as he stressed the value of an intelligent vote. "(The late councilman) Lindsay spoke outloud... but didn't serve us, "Kim charged.

SALT LAKE CITY — Ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of the signing of Executive Order 9066 at the desert site of the Central Utah (Topaz) War

The Day of Remembrance, co-sponsored by Mt. Olympus, Salt Lake and Wasatch Front North chapters, was led by Jeff Itami of Salt Lake. Beckwith spoke of Topaz, and how Frank Yoshimura of Mt. Olympus with others established the monument with 80% of Jane Beckwith's grandfather had settled in central Utah in 1913 and bought the local newspaper. Her father continued the business. So it was natural that she would come to teach journal-ism and English at the 800-stu-dent Delta High School.

TOPAZ PROJECT—Delta (Utah) High School journalism teacher Jane Beckwith receives Utah Chapter's plaque from Jeff Itami in recognition of her students 'project on the Japanese Americans interned at the nearby Topaz WRA Center.

In 1982, as a serious class venture, she assigned her journalism students to do a story on the incar-ceration of Japanese Americans at Topaz. They took to the project with gusto — doing research, tap-ing oral histories, conducting interviews and writing articles. As a result, an information packet was published for high schools and distributed statewide and also became a significant part of the Delta City Museum on the Topaz camp

Reckwith also related receiving "unfriendly" mail while remind-ing Utahns of the truth to the WWII ordeal of Japanese Americans in the camps.

The three JACL chapters also recognized Utah Governor Norman Bangerter (R) for his strong support of redress in the mid-1980s. He urged the Utah congressional delegation to pass the bills. The governor's fa grew up in what is now West Valley City and always expressed his unhappiness about the injus-tice of EO 9066. His office manager. Dorothy Mooso, a Yonsei from Hilo, accepted the plaque. She remembered some leaders in Hawaii who were suspected by the FBI as being spies were abruptly arrested after EO 9066 and, ironically, to be interned at Topaz. While the Caucasian student body has dropped from 66% to 41% in the 1980-1990 period and Asians rose from 20% to 30% (by rank: Chinese, Filipino, Korean and Japanese American), the Japanese had dropped from 4.1 to 2.2%. In 1991, more than 50% of the Asian freshmen were foreignborn; overall freshman enrollment -Asian 32%, Caucasian 30%, Latino 20% and African American 7.5%. Racial stereotypes, in-timidation and anti-Asian campus climate were uncovered in the survey of some 250 Asian students. [Newsletter Ed: P.O. Box

The Civil Liberties Act of 1988 mandates redress payments to each eligible individual living on the date of the bill's enactment, and provides for a public fund to finance historical research and education about the World War II internment of Japanese Ameri-cans. The educational component of the act will not commence until individual payments have been completed, which, at the earliest, would be late 1993. Thus, the appointments are being made well in advance of the date that the board will be required to function er the Civil Liberties Act of

The Justice Department has projected that there will be a sig-nificant shortfall in funds under the act to complete all individual payments. Congressman Richard Gephardt (D-Mo.) has introduced HR 4551 in the House and Sen. Daniel Inouye (D-Hawaii) has in-troduced S. 2553 in the Senate to provide the additional authoriza-tion necessary to fulfill the intent of the act.

While the administration sup-orts the additional authorization to complete individual payments. it has asked Congress to amend the act to eliminate the public education fund. Assistant Attor-ney General John Dunne had ear-lier testified on behalf of the Administration that the education fund was unnecessary because "its (educational) functions have been largely undertaken and performed by other entities, including other arms of the federal government.' Dunne cited a Smithsonian ex hibit and private efforts as examples of this.

The JACL, however, strongly The JACL, however, strongly feels that education is an essential part of the original legislation. In earlier testimony before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations, Hayashi emphasized, "This country can ill afford to forget the importance of upholding civil liberties during periods of national turmoil. The education fund will help guarantee that our nation does not for get. (FC) of U.S.-Japan relations.

But even if it is about U.S.-Japan relations, Japanese Ameri-cans remain nonetheless con-cerned and wary of the book." My book is not in my mind critical of Japanese Americans. It doesn't say anything about Japanese Americans," said Crichton.

say anything about Japanese Americans, said Orichton.

"Some Japanese Americans have expressed to me concern that this book will create problems for them as a people with the possibility of increased prejudice," said Crichton. "I certainly understand that because I know the concern that I have being called a racist may affect myrelations with Japanese people here who may read se people here who may read scriptions of me and not read my book. I am sure that people who read my book stand what I'm talking about. I personally believe that racism is an offense against God and it's also a distraction from economic questions of importance.

"One thing that surprises me very much is the inability to distinguish between Japanese Americans and Japanese, Japanese Americans are very clear about not being Japanese; when they go to Japan, they are not treated as Japanese," said Crichton, noting the fact that origi-nally he had included a Japanese ican character to further emphasize the point but that his edi tor had deemed it unnecessary.

Told by L.A. police detective
Peter Smithin, Rising Sun, is a portrait of a Los Angeles where the politicians, business, the news media and law enforcement are corrupt. Where in a Raymond corrupt. Where in a Raymond Chandler novel, the villains might have been land developers or oil barons, the villains of this '90s L.A. murder mystery are Japa-nese and the people in power in the United States who have let se come in and take Refuting the idea that Rising Sun is a Japan bashing novel Crichton said, This is a book that's intensely, intensely critical of America, written by an American for Americans. It is very critical of the government and politicians. It says we are in decline, says we are falling apart and says s strongly.

interested that so many readers chose not to look at (criticism of America), but instead chose to look away and discuss the book rms of its criticism

Japan. I trust my readers and I believe that people will understand that there is a problem between the two nations that must olved and that the resolution involves change in America, said Crichton

Capt. John Connor, the veteran detective and Japan expert serves the readers primary guide to Japanese business, sees the Japa-nese exercising greater influence in American society as nothing sinister, but as trying to mana, investments which are in troub because of America's problems Connor says, "The Japanese have billions of dollars in this peculiar land and they would like a d return on their investment And even though the American economy is collapsing—it will soon be third in the world after Japan and Europe—it's still important to try and hold it together."

Crichton says that the criticism of this collapse in American soci-ety in the novel is far greater than cny criticism of Japan. cans always turn away from criti-cism of American. No one has asked me about that. It's as if everyone agrees. Yes, the politi cians are corrupt, yes. It's as if it's not news, but it's important." Of the Americans, the most villainous in the novel are United States senators. Senator Morton, the lascivious, corrupt politician has an affair with the call girl, Cheryl Austin, that sets the stage for her murder. He is talked about in the novel as a possible presidential candidate, but at the same time, he makes jokes about bombing Japan and says, at one point, "We are at war with Japan...Loose lips "Senator Morton als sink snips. Senator Morton also has sex with (or rapes, this point is vague) Cheryl Austin on the boardroom table of the Nakamoto corporation which Connor notes probably infuriated the Japanese as "disrespectful."

However, the point which has been debated especially in the Japanese American community are the Japanese characters in el. Rising Sun features several Japanese characters in-cluding: Ishigura, the efficient, villainous Nakamoto executive who masterminds the cover-up of the murder, Eddie Sakamura, a free-wheeling sleazy playboy son of a chief Nakamoto rival; and Theresa Asakuma, a beautiful disabled half-African American half-Japanese computer tech who helps Smith solve the murder and provides hints of romantic interest to Rising Sun. Ishigura, middle-aged and fluent in English is portrayed as the quintessential Japanese company man who will do anything for the company. But are his villainous actions a stereo-type of "sneaky" Japanese or the actions of a man out of control? Towards the end of the novel, Connor says about Ishigura, "He had much at stake—so much, that he behaved differently from an

However, the novel is unclear in the concept of "ordinary Japa-nese." Of the Japanese charac-ters, Asakuma is the most sympatic, but her experience of Ja pan is as an conspicuous outsider. She talks of the burakumin, the outcasts of Japanese society and her own mixed heritage and disability saying, "I was lower than burakumin, because I was deformed. To the Japanese, defor-mity is shameful. Not sad, or a mity is shameful. Not sad, or a burden. Shameful. It means you have done something wrong.

Crichton says that there are just many, if not more American villains in his novel as Japanese villains, but that critics have cho sen only to focus on the Japanese. "I am interested that people see so many more Japanese villains than American villains. Along with the complaint of Japanese stereotypes there's the complaint that they're hardly (in the novel). But that's because it's a book about America and that's why the emphasis is what it is.

Another theme which may be unsettling to Japanese Americans are statements that the Japanese are racist. Throughout the novel, Crichton describes Japanese poli-ticians and businessmen who call criticism over economic issuesas racism to avoid real issues. Connor says at the end of the novel: "They (the Japanese) have real integrity. They are also the most racist people on the planet. That's why they're always accusing everybody else of regism."

On the charge that the Japanese cry racism, Crichton said, "Japanese government spokes-people are very skilful at raising the spectre of racism in many contexts. A change in import tariffs on light trucks in criticized as racist immediately. But it must be sible for the two greatest inpossible for the two garden to dustrialized nations on earth to arrange their economic policies, to make changes and have dis-putes without claiming that the basis of these disputes is racist. That is a disservice to the difficul-ties we fact on both sides."

The povelist asserted that the ook only "mirrored the mood" of the country and did not propogate U.S.-Japan tensions. "Like Oliver Stone (in J.F.K), my intention is to do something that will produce some reaction. I would be very concerned if my book were taken as an argument in favor of protectionism, isolationism, racism, any of those xenophobic things. I would be very disturbed if it provoked be very disturbed if it provoked outbreaks of prejudicial behavior. anid Crichte

According to Crichton, the novel is a commentary on the fact that the U.S.-Japan relationship has changed and that America has not en to that fact.

The real reason I wrote the book, having read the revisionist books, was the questions they raised were very serious ones and demanded a discussion," said Crichton

The revisionists, many of whom are listed in the bibliography to Rising Sun, include scholars and Rising Sun, journalists like Clyde Prestowitz, James Fallows of Atlantic Monthly and Karel Van Wolferen who have taken a new, harder line towards Japan. In Fallows' 1989 article "Containing Japan," he warns that Japan's trade practices are a threat to America, saying "Merely recog-nizing that American and Japanese interests do conflict is in it-self an essential step. It frees us of the delusion that normal business competition will balance out whatever is unbalanced now."

Similarly, Crichton commented, We are not being practical and appropriate in our relations with Japan and that's contributing to the decline of America. It's not their fault, it's our fault. That argument is so important that right or wrong, it must be considered. It has been ignored, pushed aside, dismissed as racist and biased that's not a satisfactory respo

Everyone in this country has lived for two generations with no discussion of Japan, so when people start to make criticism or Japanese politicians start to make criticisms of America, these criticisms seem very new and surprising. They seem stronger for their newness. But I believe it's necessary for us to enter's time that includes mutual criticism and that's okay.

Crichton says it's time for ev-eryone, including Japanese Ameri-cans, to quit looking to the past in defining how they react to criti-cisms of Japan. As an example, he noted that the Rape of Nanking in 1937 when Japanese soldiers killed thousands of Chinese, isn't a proper way of looking at the Japanese of today. On the fact that the fallout from U.S.-Japan trade tensions has brought back bad memories of Pearl Harbor and World War II, Crichton said, "It's important to remember how long ago that was. We live in a very different world now

The author said he felt it was time for Japanese Americans to move beyond World War II, although he acknowledged that for those who experienced the camps, it would constantly be part of their

Stalin evacuated Koreans in WWII

G enerations ago, poverty-stricken peasants from the provinces of north-eastern Korea made their way across poorly marked borders and settled in the Russian maritime provinces. They were a frugal and hard-working people and the Russians were glad to have them in that sparsely populated region.

In 1932 Japan seized Manchuria and the in 1932 Japan seized manchuna and the Russians began to worry about possible Japanese designs on adjoining parts of Si-beria. Five years later Japanese armies moved into North China and Stalin became even more worried.

Among his worries were the Koreans who had settled in eastern Siberia. Might they not be a Fifth Column which would turn on the Soviets if Japan decided to invade Russian territory? Stalin did what any self-respecting dictator would do. He ordered a round-up of Koreans in Siberia and had them sent off to concentration camps in the vast interior of the Soviet leadness.

Some 450,000 men, women and children were swept up in this Asian version of the Evacuation. Gradually the Koreans were released from the camps and integrated into Soviet society. Apparently there was nothing for them to go back to in their

Boris Kim is of undiluted Korean blood although he is a citizen of Russia. He holds a doctorate and he is an associate professor in the Moscow Institute of Oil and Gas. After three years of trying he was permit-ted by Soviet authorities to go to the University of Wyoming where he is a visiting research professor in the department of petroleum engineering. His handsome wife, Elvira, describes herself as a Tartar which my dictionary defines as a person of Mongolic or Turkic origin.

We laughed, but without much mirth. There was little comfort in learning that Japanese Americans were not the only ones Sapanese Americans were not the only ones slapped into cold storage during war be-cause their ethnic ties had stirred distrust. Nor in the thought that the government of the United States of America had resorted in the name of national security to the same sort of action that the ruthless dictator Joseph Stalin had taken.

Incidentally, Boris Kim is searching desperately for a job so that U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service vill permit him to remain in America after the and of his fellowship at the University of Wyoming.

By KAREN NARASAKI Washington, D.C., rep

Working in Washington, D.C., it is easy to be seduced by the cynicism that p vades this city. Lobbying ca become a performance, a war of words and abstract principles. Then something hap-pens that makes the abstract principles concrete.

Last week, Nemesio Domingo came to town to advocate on behalf of the Wards Cove cannery workers. In his talks, he reminded us that justice and fairness are reminded us that justice and fairness are not only abstract principles to the 2,000 Asian Pacific Americans and Native Alaskans affected by their exclusion from the Civil Rights Act of 1991. During the final days leading up to the piassage of the act last fall, the Wards Cove Cannery Company was able to slip in a special interest provision to exempt itself from accountability to the Civil Rights Act of 1991.

Daphne Kwok, executive director of the Organization of Chinese Americans (OCA), and I accompanied Domingo on three days of intense lobbying of the Senate. Domingo was the named plaintiff of the original lawsuit signist several Alaskar, canner lawsuit against several Alaskan cannery lawsuit against severu Alasca Cove. His case was split into three cases. Two of them ended in multi-million dollar judgments against the cannery companies. The third case, known as Antonio v. Wards Cove Pack-The third ing Co. went to the Supreme Court and wa one of the cases necessitating the Civil

Domingo was 17 when he and his brother began to ask innocent questions about why their bunkhouse was different from the bunkhouse designated for the white workers, why they had to eat different food in ers, why they had to eat different lood in segregated mess halls, and why they did not get the chance to advance to higher paying jobs within the canneries. They talked to their father who had worked in the canneries more than 30 years before them. They found out that their bunk-house, known as the Filipino or "monkey had not changed since their father time. It was still the same rickety barrack-style building, leaning to one side, unpainted and barely heated. But the bunkhouses for white workers were relatively new, well-heated, comprised of small rooms housing only three to four workers. The segregation only three to four workers. The segregation and discrimination was so pervasive that even the bed sheets were kept segregated. Domingo has been fighting for fair and equal treatment for the cannery workers at the Wards Cove-owned canneries for almost 20 years. When asked by Senate staffers why this case continues to be so imporers why this case continues to be so impor-tant to him, he answered simply: Asian Pacific Americans along with Native Alas-kans have been the backbone of the fish canning industry for generations. They deserve to have an equal chance at jobs they have proven themselves to be capable of doing.

He spoke eloquently of the contributions that Asian Pacific Americans have made to the fish canning industry in Alaska. The Chinese first worked in the canneries at the turn of the century. One of the ma-chines that mechanized some of the hardchines that mechanized some of the hard-est work is named after them, "The Iron Chink." Domingo carried from Senate of-fice to Senate office a heavy brass plaque emblazoned with that racist name that had been removed from one of these machines. It signified beyond words the history and depth of discrimination against Asian Pa-

Culture: Sumo and Yakuza

MONG BOOKS sitting on my shelf A waiting to be read are ones on sumo and the yakuza, both being intriguing subjects. The former because it has an indefin-able fascination even while I don't understand the fine points of the contest. As those of you who have watched the matches those of you want have watched the maches know, it's replete with ceremony, posturing that apparently has meaning, tossing of salt onto the arena, and so on. When one does not appreciate the meanings of the ceremony or the art involved in the bout, the essence is lost. Like the proverbial "pearl before swines." (And I'm hardly the pearl" in that proverb.)

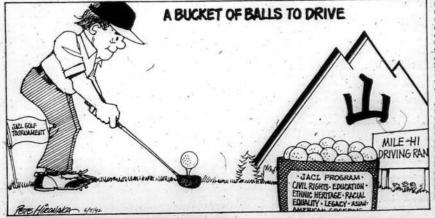

By the time this column appears on these bages, it will have been determined whether Konishiki,"—Hawaiian-American Salevaa Atisance—has emerged as the winner of the current tournament being held in Tokyo. Konishiki has attained ozeki (chamhyo. comming hy virtue of his record (13-2), but the bestowal of the rank of "grand champion" (yokoruna) has eluded him thus far. Some commentators assert that Konishiki needs to attain hinkaku (dignity), a rather indefinable, and thus elusive, whatever.

AS FOR "YAKUZA", I started to read a sook by that title written by a David Kaplan. Setween my ignorance of the Japanese Between my ignorance of the Japanese mobsters with author Kaplan's cultural eneralizations that resulted in distortions, I put the book aside with the intent of returning to it one of these days. In the meanwhile. I see from the newspapers that the mobsters are trying to go, or at least appear, "legit" by changing their names, the mobsters are trying to go, or at least appear, "legit" by changing their names, establishing dummy corporations with concomitant change of titles—oya-bun ("boss") now becomes sha-cho ("president"). This is reputedly prompted by yet another recent Japanese law purporting to crack down on these mobsters. The Yamaguchi-gumi has long been reported as the largest gang in Japan with no less than a membership of $0.00 in 112 affiliates throughout Nipoon. 30,000 in 117 affiliates throughout Nippon. That's reportedly about one-third of all gangs in Japan. Total estimated income or "take" per year: $$ billion. That comes to about $90,000 per thug.

IT'LL BE INTERESTING to see if the Japanese authorities truly mean it this time or are just going through a charade to placate the citizenry. Japanese gangsters have been so ensconced in Japanese society that in many quarters they are secretly admired as proponents and preservers of some of the "old ways." Indeed, individual gangs have their logos with members proudly wearing pins bearing the mob logo as well as carrying calling cards setting forth their affiliation and rank, Apparently, forth their affiliation and rank, Apparently, it has not been uncommon to hire yakuza goons to "keep order" at some corporate shareholder meetings, particularly where management anticipates dissident voices. At the same time, however, these yakuza elements also engage in corporate shakedowns in return for not disrupting otherwise peaceful shareholder meetings. They "take" either way.

IN A PREVIOUS column I mentioned what I understood to be the derivation of the term "yakuza." In a Japanese card game (don't ask me which one; I don't know) the hand of "eight, nine, three" ("ya-ku-za" being the abbreviation for these three numerals) is a losing hand. So yakuza mem-bership purportedly consists of "losers" in the social competition.

Redress work not over

By JERRY ENOMOTO nal Chai

Like all important-battles for high stakes, the redress campaign has campaign has been one of ups and downs, joy and sorrow. All of us who hoped for a timely ending to this difficults aga were once again confronted with a crisis, when the number of eligibles for payment were found to exceed the funds allocated. You all know by now that the Civil Liberties Act Amendments of 1992, HR

4551 and S 2553, are in the legislative s, and must be passed in order for the ary additional $320 million to be authorized. Thus we must once again enter the lobbying arena in order to insure that the justice finally accorded two-thirds of the victims of internment, will not be denied those yet to receive redress. During the recent Tule Lake Reunion in Sacramento. union in Sacramento, attended by a record breaking crowd of over 1,000 (1,100 at the Sayonara Banquet), we were able to mail 1,000 letters to President Bush and various Congressional members, paying for postage and stationery with still remaining LEC funds. The idea was LEC Board member Mollie

Fujioka's. The immediate responsiveness of Sacramento JACLers Toko Fujii, Presient Mike Sawamura,and Florin JACLer Mary Tsukamoto, was key to the last minute project's success. We are also indebted to Washington D.C., Rep. Karen Narasaki and NCWNP DC Regional Director Patty Wada, nce in drafting and sending out the letters. Of course those who assisted us in actually getting the letters signed are also due our thanks

In this last lobbying effort, Cherry Kinoshita, vice chair of operations for LEC, will be the key person in coordinating with the National JACL the effort to reactivate the LEC networks around the country. Our messages to the President and your sena-tors and congresspersons should stress the need to continue redress funding under an entitlement, and not change it to direct spending, which would place redress in di-rect competition with many worthy causes and reduce the prospects of funding. The retention of the education component of the redress fund should also be urged. On another note, it is a pleasure to note that the Tule Lake Reunion banquet provided the opportunity to pay tribute to Bob Bratt, former executive director of the Office of Redress Administration. It is not often that we find a public servant with a pers commitment to an assignment, and redress was more than a job to Bob. His leadership made a difference in expediting the delivery

In concluding this piece, I must report on a meeting with Bob Matsui, where he told of what was going on behind the scenes, and that we do have a serious problem in concluding redress in a timely and successful manner. Bob, Norman Mineta, and Sen. Daniel Inouye are still on the line for the Japanese American community. It reminds me that, although redress was certainly a bi-partisan effort, without them and the late Sen. Spark Matsunaga, we wouldn't have gotten to first base.
Incidentally, I was pleased to be in attendance on May 26, when the Anti-Defama-tion League presented Bob Matsui with its Distinguished Public Service Award. Finally, back to the bottom line—let's get those letters to Washington!

Trade protectionism will hurt Californians

"We need to keep out foreign goods to save American jobs." That is the refrain which is now being repeated by big business, big labor and various presidential candidates. And unfortunately, with the domestic economy stampating, the siren's song of protectionism has become increasingly

But does trade protectionism really save jobs? On the one hand, if, for example, we refuse to allow Japanese and other foreign cars into the American market, American consumres will be forced to choose domestically built autos for their personal transportation. This obviously means that those jobs in the domestic auto industry that would have been jobs in the domestic auto industry that would have been lost due to competition from abroad will be saved.

This outward simplicity is the backbone of the protectionist position. And indeed, if things stopped there, it would be hard to argue against such a policy. The problem, however, is that the protectionists are only telling half the

It is important to remember that U.S. trade actions do not occur in a vacuum. After all, if I poke you in the eye, your first instinct would be to do the same to me. Similarly, the real world is not made up of economic Gandhis. U.S. actions will most assuredly trigger foreign reactions such as the erection of retaliatory trade barriers. And these foreign reactions would have considered the such as the contract the such desiration of the such as th ctions would have one big immediate effect—they would put Americans out of work.

Take California, for instance. In 1990, California ex-ported $58 billion worth of goods to foreign countries, or nearly 15 percent of the total amount of U.S. exports. Some of the bigger export items included; industrial and commer cial machinery ($13.5 billion), electronic and electrical equipment ($11.8 billion), transportation equipment ($7.9 billion), precision instruments ($4.4 billion, and food prod-ucts ($3.8 billion). The state Commerce Department estimates that roughly 230,000 California jobs result directly from the production of exports. If our trading partners from the production of exports. If our trading partners decided to impose retaliatory trade restrictions, many of these jobs would be jeopardized.

Take a specific scenario involving, let's say, agriculture. Over the years, Japan has elssed its restrictions on foreign agricultural commodities, which has greatly benefitted the California farmer. Thus, today, in addition to being California to poverall export market, Japan also ranks as the number one customer for California's $2.8 billion agricultural judgets (27 000 jobs in California are directly cultural industry (27,000 jobs in California are directly related to agricultural exports). What would happen then if Washington bowed to pressure from the corporate socialists in Detroit and drastically reduced the number of Japanese cars entering this country, which in turn caused the Japanese to reimpose agricultural import restrictions? Disaster in Detroit? No, the disaster would be in California.

Furthermore, erecting a trade wall around a specific parket such as automobiles would raise the price of cars, which would then result in a ripple effect of unemployment in other sectors of the economy. Recall that since 1984, U.S. steel import restrictions have saved 17,000 jobs in the domestic steel industry, but have also increased the price of steel to consumers causing the loss of more than 54,000 jobs in other industries. As the top car-buying state in the prices on California's already shaky job situation.

The point is, U.S. trade protectionism that begets foreign trade protectionism would throw thousands of Californians into the unemployment lines, and would devastate the state's economy.

The loss of jobs, however, is just one of protectionism's glaring negatives. Even more important is the loss of freedom that will be felt by each and every American consumer. Whg is Lee lacocca to tell the American people that they should not be free to buy a Honda, a Volvo, or a VW? The Detroit corporate socialists admit that they have made horrendous cars over the past years, but now contend that their cars are much improved. Assuming that is true, such improvement is the direct result of Americans free-dom to choose quality foreign-made autos, which created the incentive for Detroit to upgrade its products.

Milton Friendman once wrote that, "The gains to some oducers from tariffs and other restrictions are more than offset by the loss to other producers and especially to consumers in general." For those of us in trade-dependent consumers in general. For those of us in trade-dependent California, we are those "other producers" and "consum ers." Therefore, for our own economic well-being, Califor-nians should be leading the fight to open up the markets of the world, and battling those who would seek to close them

Time is running out for war victims

Apologles to the victims of Japanese aggression in Korea, China and Southeast Asia are not enough, argues lawyer Kenichi Takagi. Japan must pay compensation to those it wronged in World War II. Tokyo has long insisted that postwar reparations settled the issue but recently, in response to several lawsuits, Japan has agreed to some payments. Last year, JACL President Cressey Nakagawa was invited to Tokyo to speak about the Japanese American experience with respect to redress. Takagi, however, says that time is running out for other aged victims, and the government must move swiftly to make honorable amends .

By KENICHI TAKAGI, Attorney at Law (From the Mainichi Shimbun)

The past is catching up with Japan as World War II victims throughout East Asia make their voices heard in Tokyo. Their demands for restitution pust be met before Japan can win the confidence of the nesion.

A three-day telephone hotline cently set up in Tokyo to gather firsthand testimony regarding the tens of thou-sands of Korean and other Asian women sands of Korean and other Asian women forced to provide sex to Japanese troops during the war. A total of 230 callers, mostly veterans, volunteered their per-sonal recollections of military-run broth-els and the "comfort women" who worked

This nation has a conscience after all, it seems. One wonders where it has been hiding all these years.
Soul-searching, most people agree, is not a Japanese forte. During the four and a half decades that took this country from devastation to economic preeminence, the nation has gone about its business as if the Pacific War were just a bad dream, turning its back on the victims of Imperial Japan's colonial rule and military aggression.

The Potsdam Declaration, which out-lined surrender terms, called for Japan's withdrawal from all territories acquired through force or coercion and the restora-tion of Korean independence, in keeping with a new era of peace and justice. When Tokyo surrendered to the Allies on Aug. 15, 1945, it accepted the obligation to right the wrongs committed under mili-tarism and rebuild Japan as a peace-loving, democratic nation.

Nowhere is this lofty commitment more clearly articulated than in the preamble to the 1946 war-renouncing Constituto the 1946 war-renouncing Constitu-tion: "We desire to occupy an honored place in an international society striving for the preservation of peace, and the banishment of tyranny and slavery, op-pression and intolerance for all time from Unfortunately, this sentiment is meaningless unless the government of Japan repudiates and provides redress for the belligerent policies of the past. Doubtless every nation has sinned at some time in its history. The crucial test of a country's honor is whether it flees from or faces up to those events.

Germans have cours esponsibility for the Holocaust a Nazi crimes and have paid out $100 bil-lion in indemnification. The United States and Canada reaffirmed their democratic principles by compensating citizens of Japanese ancestry who were illegally confined in relocation camps during World War II. And the Soviet Union raised the curtain on a new era by making public and denouncing the crimes of the Stalin

In honestly acknowledging its guilt, each of these countries earned the trust and respect of the international commu-nity. Why has Japan alone, despite its alistic Constitution, failed to come to grips with its aggression and cruelty?

One reason is that until fairly recently demands for indemnification were scattered and muted.

After World War II, Tokyo's top policy objective in East Asia was opening the door to Japanese trade and investment. Most countries in the region were desper-ate for capital to energize their strug-gling economies, enabling Tokyo to con-clude normalization treaties that guaranteed market access for Japanese in-

Several weeks ago, the U.S. Com mission on Civil Rights published a comprehensive report on "Civil Rights lssues Pacing Asian Americans in the 1990s." The report soncludes that, contrary to popular perception, Asian Americans are currently the victims of discrimination, bigotry, and hate. non-white workers.
Sen. Adams (D-Wash.) and Congressman McDermott (D-Wash.), supported by JACL, OCA and the supported by JACL, OCA and the National Asian Pacific American National Asian Pacific American Bar Association, immediately in-troduced legislation, S. 1962/H. 8 3748 aimed at removing Wards Cove's special exemption from the Givil Rights Act of 1991. The Lead-ership Confession of the Conf ership Conference on Civil Rights ership Conference on Civil Rights and labor groups, such as the In-ternational Longshoremen, Ware-housemen Union and the AFL-CIO, have made this legislation one of their top priorities this year.

Ironically, the high paid lobby-ists for Wards Cove recently urged senators to oppose the passage of S. 1962, on the basis that it is special interest legislation. They argue that the case has no merit, ignoring the fact that the other two companion cases won after being heard under the proper le-gal standard—the standard iggal standard—the standard ig-nored by the Supreme Court in the Wards Cove case and restored by Congress when it passed Civil Rights. Act of 1991. They argue that it would be unjust to the company to have to go to court one more time, ignoring the fact that it is the cannery company's deci-sion to continue to fight to pre-serve their right to discriminate.

Thanks to the efforts of Sen.
Adams (D-Wash.) and Reps.
Matsui (D-Calif.), Mineta (D-Calif.), Mink (D-Hawaii), and
McDermott (D-Wash.), the legislation is still alive. However, they need your help to convince Con-gress and the President to do the right thing. We need to send a message to employers such as Wards Cove Packing Company and congressmen such as the Alaskan senators that Asian Pacific Americans will not silently stand by while their rights are ignored and their lives discounted. Write your senator today. If you need a sample letter or any other seformation, please call the Washington, D.C., J.A.C.l. office at 292/223-1240.

dustry and effectively closed the oks on the reparations issue. Tokyo had the blessing of Wash ington, which held the fate of post-war Japan in its hands. With Cold War tensions mounting, the United States needed a reliable East Asian ally to round out its Soviet containment strategy. The Truman administration knew that any serious accounting for the Pacific War would undermine Japan financially and politically.

The Tokyo war crimes trials con-victed some of those responsible for the conflict and atrocities. Having punished a handful of Jap leaders, the U.S. Occupati left the prewar bureaucracy virtu-ally intact and allowed many mem-bers of the old ruling elite to assume pivotal positions in the post-war government.

For decades the mass media and intelligentsia, along with the left-wing opposition parties, waged ideological warfare against the conservative Establishment. Yet the progressives were no more ea-ger than their foes to make amends for past injustices.

Having shunned the truth and neglected its moral duty in the neglected its moral duty in the single-minded pursuit of economic growth, Japan is now viewed as a shifty, unprincipled temporizer that only evers from the path of narrow self-interest when com-pelled by outside pressures. In 1991, Prime Minister Toshki Kaifu made the first formal apolo-tice for the sufferior, Japan in-gies for the suffering Japan in-flicted on its neighbors. His suc-cessor Kiichi Miyazawa has echoed those remarks.

But words are not enough. To-kyo must provide material retri-bution — and soon.

Finally, their message seems to be getting through. The govern-ment agreed to pay about $15,000; to the family of each Taiwanese who died in the service of the Japa-nese Imperial Army and to those who were wounded.

Tokyo has also earmarked $30 million to aid Koreans injured in the atomic bombings of Hireshima and Nagasaki, many of whom were brought here as forced labor. Those repatriated to Korea after the war never received any of the benefits provided to A-bomb victims in Ja-

Attention has also been focused on the plight of thousands of Ko-rean laborers who were taken to Sak halin and abandoned to Soviet rule after Japan's surrender.
Money has been allocated for a study that could lead to the creation of a fund for Koreans still living on the island.

But many of those entitled to indemnification have already died. These belated moves are all to the good, but unless Tokyo moves swiftly, the chance to make amends will be lost forever.

Certainly we have the means. It remains to be seen whether we have the will.

rious national problem."

This report comes at a time when the United States constitutes demographically the most multi-culociety in any one country. In California there will be no ra-cial majority by the end of this century, and we will be forced to century, and we will be forced to confront—and to change—these inherently divisive attitudes and social structures. As the Civil Rights Commission study indi-Rights Commission study indi-cates, we have further to go than we had perhaps imagined before we become a truly functional and pluralistic multicultural society. It is alarming that Asian newcom-ers to our shores and Asian Americans who have worked hard to excel and assimilate into our society (and have long been subject to racism and nativist sentiments are now being viciously attacked in unprecedented numbers.

The fact is, however, that his-tory can and does repeat itself. The resurgence in anti-Asian American hate crimes resulting in physical attacks and tragic deaths attests to this. If we are to deaths attests to this. If we are to avoid repeating injustices of the past, we must educate everyone, kindergarten through graduate school, the public in general, about cultures different from their own. We must provide the classes, fo-rums and other opportunities (such as cultural exchanges) to examine the facts, myths and sterectypes which historically have led to prejudice, fear, racism and ate crimes. The internment of America

Japanese heritage occurred 50 years ago, but it is not past. We tell ourselves that such acts couldn't happen in the 1990s. Af-ter all, the cold war is finally coming to an end and former East-West enemies are becoming fnends. President de Klerk and the white population of South Af-rica overwhelmingly approved a referendum declaring an end to apartheid and vowing to share power with the black majority.

The long-silent victims of Japa nese aggression in East Asia are now coming forward. A milepost in their struggle to be heard was the international forum on com-pensation held in Tokyo last Au-

But it is saddening and bitterly ironic that Asian and Asian American bashing is on the rise just as we commemorate nationally the 50th anniversary of Executive Or-der 9066, interning by government order many Japanese Ameri-cans. Their only crime was to be Americans of color in a time of war. Anyone visibly of Asian heriwar. Anyone visibly of Asian neri-tage was indiscriminately labeled a "Jap," equated with the "en-emy," and used as a scapegoat for society's ignorance, fears and ra-cial prejudice.

America's strength has histori-cally been based on individualism and diversity. Democracy has embraced openness to different views and values. We must now call upon our enormous vitality to meet the new challenge of com-bating ethnocentrism. We must simply reject a violent society bred of racial prejudice and cultural misunderstandings. We must meet and answer the challenge of linking our multicultural society with international interdepenwith international interdependence. D
