HONOLULU—The Board of Directors of the 442nd Veterans Club of Oahu, through the efforts of the Deacon Ernest Uno, passed a resolution on August 3 passed a resolution on August 3 formally recognizing and com-mending the World War II Japanese American draft re-sisters of conscience of the Heart Mountain Fair Play Committee. The Heart Mountain Fair Play

Committee consisted of young Nikkei men, a large number who were interned in the U.S. concentration camp at Heart Mountain, Wyo., who protested the intern-ment of persons of Japanese an-cestry, and refused to comply with military draft orders until their parents were released from camps and they were given back their rights as U.S. citizens.

They were jailed for their resis-tance and called traitors by many of the leaders within the Nikkei community.

At the same time, a large num-ber of Nisei volunteered or were drafted from the concentration camps to serve in the U.S. armed forces, many in the 442nd Regi-mental Combat Team (RCT), some in the Military Intelligence Service (MIS).

For decades there was anisity and antagonism by n sei veterans toward t y many Nisei veterans toward those Japanese Americans who had re-fused to report for military duty. But the Hawaiian veterans group-has now taken a first step toward healing this longstanding rift in jhe Japanese American community, hoping that other Ni-sei veterans groups will follow wit Nisei quit

Although the JACL has been criticized over the years for its stance on the draft, resistance stance on the urant resistance during the war, a move to recog-nize the resisters as acting hon-orably in taking a stand for their constitutional rights was recently begun by the Pacific Southwest District of the JACL.

Initiative 200 cleverly asks the Initiative 200 clevery assistic question that is equivalent to, "Do you still beat your wife?" By assuming facts not established, I-200 similarly asks whether un-lawful preferences provided by affirmative action should be abolished.

The wording of I-200 is unfair because it assumes that affirma tive action does, in fact, provide "special treatment" based on race *special treatment' based on race or gender. Preying on semantics and emotion, the same creators who' sponsored California's Proposition 209, hope that voters will be disillusioned by erroneous concepts of affirmative action. Concepts of ammative action. Contrary to what backers of 1-200 assert, affirmative action in Washington state does not allow unqualified minorities to take jobs away from qualified white male workers, nor does it allow quotas in employment practices or public works projects. Rather, affirmative action for

CENSUS 2000 Court rules no on sampling

BY TRACY UBA in Oltimo

On August 24, a federal court in Washington, D.C., unanimous-ly ruled against the use of scien-tific sampling by the Census Bu-reau in the U.S. House of Representatives vs. U.S. Department of Commerce case. The decision comes as quite a blow to Demo rats and to underrepresented mi-norities, including Asian Pacific Americans northes, including Asian Pachic Americans. Karen Narasaki, executive di-rector of the National Asian Pa-cific American Legal Consortium, said, "We believe that the court's decision is contrary to existing supreme court case law which states that the Census Bureau should have unlimited discretion in conducting the census. We plan to appeal the decision be-cause Asian Pacific Americans and other minorities were under-counted at a much higher rate than white Americans in the 1990 Census. The Census Bu-reau must be allowed to use sci-entific methods to ensure a fair and accurate count in Census 2000.² The results of the 1990 Census

The results of the 1990 Census revealed, for instance, that in ad-dition to 2.3 percent of APAs who were undercounted, 4.4 percent of African Americans, 5 percent of Latinos, 12.2 percent of Native Americaus living on reservations and 0.7 percent of whites were missed. Also among those who were undercounted, many hap-pened to be children, seniors, renters and those living in rural areas. Scientific, or statistical, sam-pling allows the Census Bureau to estimate the population in hard-to-reach areas based on re-sults from neighboring areas. House Republicans, meanwhile, insist that this method is unconstitutional and that census information must be based on a per-son-by-person count to be truly accurate. The fear behind the lawsuit was that the sampling method al-lowed Democrats to use the re-sulting population count to ap-portion more seats in Congress, which violates the Census Act, Republicans contend. The three federal judges agreed. Democrats, on the other hand, maintain that simpling is simply used to determine demographic information and is, for all intents and purposes, the most practical and purposes, the most practical way of representing those six mil-lion people who would otherwise

JA rising rodeostar captures All-Around Cowboy title

BY CRAIG ISHIHARA

Ahhhhhhh, childhood memories Trips to the park, fun in the sand-box, roping calves ... Wait. Roping calves? For Matthew Shierer

For Matthew Shozawa, an 18-year-old Hapa Yonsei, roping calves was just another part of his daily life. Growing up on a farm in Pocatello, Idaho, where there weren't many opportunities to play team sports, he looked to activities that he could do by himself. Seeing as there were cows and horses hanging about, and how his father, Kent Shiozawa, had been roping for 40 years, calf roping presented itself as an option for him to ex-itself as an open plore. We always had horses and my dad had roped too," Matt said, "I just watched him and [got interest tu m nj. This past August, after over a decade of training year-round, Matthew Shiozawa captured the ti-tie of All-Around Cowboy at the Na-tional High School Rodeo finals in Gillette, Was. He is the first Japan-se Amarican to sure in this ese Am erican to ever win this al title

Admittedly, it is rather out of the ordinary to see a Japanese Ameri-can cowboy, and Matt's father knows it. "That's pretty funny isn't knows it. "That's pretty tunny usn' it? There just aren't that many Japanese people that rope," he said. "Roping had just been a situa-tion we had come by because of where we were raised. If we lived in the city, well, I suppose we would be comething else." Just in case some of you non-warbow torus are confused as to

Just in case some of you non-cowboy types are confused as to what "roping" is all about, the ob-ject of this sport is to floor 200 pounds of beef and then tie up its legs with the aid of a lasso and a horse. Matt can catch and tie up there where is less than 20 are three calves in less than 30 sec

Calf roping is not the sport for people who have problems with commitment. Ever since he turned six years old, Matt's father would take him out roping every day of him out roping every day summer and four days a w the summ him. "Sometimes I felt pressured, but is easier to put forth effort when it is easier to put forth effort you have success," Matt said.

Matt was a winner from the be-ginning. He won his first saddle when he was 11, his first horse trailer when he was 14, and took the Jr. Rodeo Championship when he was 12.

This past year, competing in the state of Nevada, Matt placed in 32

School Rodeo finals. This rodeo is said to be the largest in the world with 1,500 contestants. Matt qualified to compete in two events, calf-roping and team roping. His part-ner for the team-roping event was his high school friend, Randon

On the last day of the week-long finals, all of the contestants met to nnais, all of the contestants met to draw numbers to see which of the 82 animals they would be roping. As it turned out, two out of the three calves that Matt had drawn were some of the more difficult ones. This would make winning the competition a lot harder: Like a true champion, Matt re-fused to allow the circumstances to the circumstances to get to him. He went after the two difficult calves first and took them down without any problems. His fa-ther, watching from the stands, was a little wor ried about the last calf because each time Matt had made it to had made it to the finals, he had always had some trouble with the last calf. Matt's father rememather remem-ered thinking, "Boy I sure we don't mess [the third calf] up that's because that's kind of been our nemesis to that point."

But this tim the third calf fell as easily as the others and Matt took first place in the calf roping competition, beating the sec-beating the sec-ond place winner by a full three-and-a-half seconds. This is a huge margin in calf-roping, which is made obvious if you look at the times of the four people who came behind him. Only a second separat-d the number of the four people who came ed the second place winner from fifth place winner. "It was a decisive win, I guess is what you'd call it more than any-thing," said the elder Shiozawa. "And that's what made it sweet for us, because if he had had really good calves and won it that would've been one thing, but to have drawn some calves that were more difficult and still accomplish the - it really made that thing a real sweet victory for us.

But it wasn't over yet. Things were about to get even sweeter. Be-cause Matt had also taken 13th place in the team-roping event, he had accumulated enough points to win the All-Around Cowboy title. The news of his latest ame as a shock to them all victory came as a shock to them all. "I was sitting down in the bleach-ers by my dad and some friends when they called my name," Matt said. "I had a big of smile on my face and I was excited, but I didn't really talk. I just got right up and walked over to the place where

Matt had won 6,000 dollars worth of scholarships along with a Featherlite three-horse trailer, two belt buckles for the events that he

If you haven't already heard of body kits, gun metal wheels or turbo chargers, chances are you're one step behind the times. Take one look at the latest publications that have come out, some of which profile the most cutting edge in auto technologies, and you'll witness a subcultural phenomenon among many Asian American kids that is gearing to go mainstream

"The import car culture is real-ly important because it's some-thing that Asian Americans creatthing that Asian Americans creat-ed over here on the west coast. We started this trend which we hope will stay [around] for awhile, says Kent Chen, the 23 year-old editor-in-chief of SXY/Showoff magazine en, who is half-Japanese and Chen, who is half-Japanese and half-Taiwanese, describes the quarterly publication as a youth-oriented, two-in-one "urban Asian American lifestyle magazine." The Showoff side features tidbits about auto culture, including tips on parts, judging at import shows and interviews with legends like Non Fujita, the three-time Import Showoff Auto winner. Flip it around and the SXY side covers around and the Sar J subcovers everything from fashion and beauty to entertainment and food. Highly glossy and filled with photos and neoprints, the com-piled layout is reminiscent of simcept magazines to come out of Japan.

out of Japan. In the past four or five years, magazines such as SXY/Shouoff and others, including Super Street and RPM, have sprouted up introducing audiences to a fledgling Asian American auto scene. Beginning in the mid 1980s, it has been heavily influenced by the vintage lowriders and supped up dragsters from an already-established Hispanic auto scene.

Though just under a year old, SXY/Showoff is already becoming a foremost influence on and representative voice for Asian American' teens and 20-some-things who consider themselves a part of this growing culture.

The magazine's impact on oth-ers largely can be attributed to the strategy behind it, a strategy which sets it apart from other AA youth-oriented vernaculars such as Yolk or A Measure Net entry youth-oriented vernaculars such as Yolk or A Magazine. Not only does SXY/Showoff place more emphasis on regular people, on their peers, as opposed to celebri-ties, but it downplays social or po-litical preaching in favor of the lighter aspects of life, which to orme more near twist seem trivial

But this is all part of their philosophy -- entertain, then when you have their attention, educate. you have their attention, educate. It is a business-savvy move which caters perfectly to their youthful readership.

If Asian American car enthusiasts have anyone to thank for the asts have anyone to triank for the recent boom in auto popularity, it is Chen's fellow brainchild, Ken Miyoshi, 25, who is not only the publisher of SXY/Showoff but one of the premier import innova-tors within the Asian American

Miyoshi, who was born in Japan and lived in the Philip-pines, moved to the United States at age 14, where he began de-jaying at local parties and, due to his interest in cars, soon started attending illegal drag races. In 1991, he started Mainstream Productions, a crew of club promot-ers. These clubs attracted young

Asian American kids, many of whom expre sed similar curiosity in auto culture. With interest growing among his peers, Miyoshi unveiled the first Import Auto Showoff in 1994, and it has contin-ued at least three times a year even locations along the west coast the Besides main auto show-case and competition, where participants are judged on the look and components of their cars. Import Showoff tures a slew of entertainment, in-cluding dance cluding dance competitions, dee iavs and local muic talent. "I feel like because we're one of the mor organized events because we're one of the most organized comttees, [we] really set standards for the import community," Mi-oshi says. Future Import Showoffs are scheduled for San Diego and Ana-heim. In early 1999, it will make See CARS/page 9

PSW's endorsement of the Indian Gaming Initiative WLA JACL Auxiliary marks first alliance between two communities

LOS ANGELES -"It's an issue of fairness, of allowing people to take control of their own destinies

As a spokesperson for the grassroots outreach campaign for Proposition 5, the California In-Self-Reliance Initiative. dian Georgette Imura appealed for support before the various chapters at the Pacific Southwest District Council meeting held on August 9. If Prop. 5 passes on the November ballot, it will not expand but simply help preserve the already-existent already-existent limited gaming among California's Indian tribes on their own land. It will protect their state-regulated ventures from larg-Nevada casinos that have ex-pressed concerns that Indian casinos are a significant threat to profits.

Imura, who worked for the state legislature worked for the state legislature for 28 years and is now the pres-ident of Liberty Consulting in Sacramento, has been specifical-ly focusing her outreach efforts on Asian Pacific Islander communities, especially non-profit, so cial service and political groups. She is joined in the "Yes on 5" campaign by Courtney Sakai and Anthony Miranda, a representa-tive from the Pechanga Reservain Temecula, Riverside tion County.

Miranda insisted at the PSW quarterly meeting that the "Sw not trying to compete with the Las Vegas conglomerate." celebrates its 40th anniversary

Members of the West Los Angeles JACL Auxiliary honored its charter members and cele brated the 40th anniversary of this unique group on July 12 at a luncheon held at the Cafe Del Rey in Marina Del Rey, Calif. The only chapter to have a women's auxiliary, the group was started by the late Dr. Milton Inouye 40 years ago to provide the members an opportunity for social meetings and philanthropic fund raising.

Over the years, the auxiliary has held fashion shows and wine tastings, published two best selling cookbooks, and now holds a boutique sale, "Aki Matsuri," to raise funds for a variety of community and national programs which need funding. Such funding has been provid ed for earthquake victims, flood victims, women's abuse shel-ters, a WLA Police Monument, the World War II Memorial and the National Japanese American Memorial in Washington, D.C. The auxiliary has also cosponsored the WLA representative for Miss Nisei Week during this era

Among the 20 women assembling for the luncheon were six of the charter members who began the group. They were Chieko Inouye, Toy Kanegai, Stella Kishi, Yuki Sato, Aiko Takeshita and Miye Yoshida. The current officers are Jean Ushijima, chair; Stella Kishi, co-chair, Eiko Iwata, secretary; Mitzi Kurashita, treasurer; and Fumie Yahiro, historian.

to pay the former internees and to educate Americans about the incarceration of Japanese Ameri-cans during WWII. The named defendants in the two claims in clude U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, Director of the Office of Redress Administration Dede Greene, and the U.S. govern-ment; all are being charged with breach of fiduciary duty and vio-lation of U.S. and international law for their failure to include JLAs in the '88 Civil Liberties Act

Act. Shima was 19 years old in 1942 when he, his two uncles, and a family friend were arrested and kidnappel by Peruvian au-thorities and shipped to the Unit-ed States. There, they and more than 2,200 JLAs were stripped of their citizenships and placed in concentration comes Shima and their citizenships and placed in concentration camps. Shima ended up at a camp in Crystal City, Texs s. Documents today reveal that the U.S. government was us-ing the JLAs in prisoner exchanges for Americans trapped in areas controlled by the Japan-

Once out of the camps, Shima's attempts to return to his home country were rejected, for he w no longer a citizen of Peru. He ended up in Seabrook, N.J., working for a frozen food company for a few years, but eventually he made his way to Los Angeles where he continues to reside to-day. Finding a job and epecially holding one down wasn't easy for him due to his poor English lannim due to his poor English lan-guage skills, but eventually he found his niche in landscape gar-dening, an occupation he held for 40 years. In 1961 Shima became a U.S. citizen and eventually married an American with whom he raised one son. Many in the Japanese Ameriranny in the Japanese Ameri-can community agree that what happened to the JLAs was to some extent worse than the JA camp experience. That's why the government's recent offer of an unguaranteed redress payment of $5,000 to every former JLA internee or their immediate family in the Mochizuki et al... lawsuit, an amount far less than the $20,000 offered JAs in the Civil Liberties Act, was so distasteful for many. JLAs had filed the law-suit in 1996 seeking to be includ-ed in the '88 Act, to this day they are being denied redress because of a material manufacture JUS citi ternee or their immediate family of a provision requiring U.S. citizenship or permanent resident status at the time of their internment

But he believes the law mit on But he believes the lawsuit, an option that is open to all other JLA former internees, is the only chance he has of receiving the full redress amount of $20,000. 'I feel like since I was born in Peru, like a Peruvian. But they arrested me. Why?' he asked. 'In my cise, after waiting as long 'for redress! me, why? he asked. In my case, after waiting so long [for redress], then they say only $5,000 and that you may not even get it."

"Mr. Shima is not interested in one penny. What he would like is for what happened to him to have never happened," said attorney never Mills

As to how the dollar amount in the lawsuit was chosen, Mills said, "$20,000 doesn't come close said, "$20,000 doesn't come close to compensating him. $10 million comes close. The money is there to give substance to the apology. These people suffered a great deal. It's easy to say you're sorry. The money backs up the apology

Shima's pursuit of a separate lawsuit has the full support of Campaign for Justice, a coalition of civil rights groups including the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California the Japanese Peruvian Oral History Project, and the Na-tional Coalition for Redress/ Reparations, who helped file Mochizuki et al... and have been Mochizuki et al ... and have been working to educate the public about the JLA story. "Some people may feel that way, but most JAs feel that what happened to JLAs was worse. More people feel, 'more power to you.'"

The event will take place at the Stockton Buddhist Temple, 2820 Shimizu Drive, to acommodate the almost 250 people who will be attending. "No, French Camp is not one of the internment camps. No, we're not French; we're Americans," are the typical responses to questions by people who slept through their geography classes. Named for French fur trappers who settled in the area just south of Stockton in 1828, French Camp became a major agricultural community as a large number of Issei began till-ing the land and establishing new roots for themselves and their children. Not only were they outstanding farmers, but the Japanese American community was highly active in com munity activities, having established a JACL chapter in 1949. "Many scattered to other areas after the war and the youngsters needed to flex their wings in the outside world, but the re sponses to the reunion call indicate that their French Camp roots were firmly embedded." aid Gail Matsui, current chap ter president.

Chicago-Nisei Post No. 1103 prepares for 50th anniversary

It may be difficult to realize It may be difficult to realize that 50 years have passed since a group of young Nikkei veterans, recently returned from Europe and the Pacific, would be induced by others (who recognized their valiant exploits) to organize a local post comprising Americans of Japanese ancestry then newly settled in the Chicago area. Little did the dozen or so who formed its nucleus anticipate the significant and enduring role the post would play in becoming a hod er in the variety of project undertaken for our Japane American veterans and for the general community.

Despite being a community far smaller in number than those on the West Coast and Hawaii, they became known throughout the States for leadership in the Cam-paign for Redress, as well as devoting themselves to the welfare of hospitalized veterans, partici-pation in a multitude of functions relating to all veterans and their sponsorship of a variety of pro-grams for Issei and their children and grandchildren.

Now is the time to commemorate and celebrate those 50 years: Saturday, Oct. 10, 1998; social hour 6 p.m., dinner 7 p.m., pro-gram and entertainment 8 p.m., gram and entertainment o p.m., dancing and music from 9 p.m. to midnight. Location: The Hyatt Regency O'Hare Hotel, 9300 W. Bryn Mawr (Kennedy Express-way at River Rd.), Rosemont, Ill., 60018

The post's organizing commit-tee invites your attendance and sponsorship participation in the 50th anniversary commemora-tion. The event will draw up-wards of 500 guests and will afford a rare opportunity to honor the role the AJA veterans played in service, culminating in becom-ing an integral part of significant aspects of our community.

Dalai Lama to chair Visas for Life Foundation advisory board

The Visas for Life Foundation recently announced that His Ho-liness The Dalai Lama of Tibet has consented to chair its adviso-ry board. The acceptance letter of July 31 was sent from the Office of His Holiness in Dharamsala, India, to Kiyomura-Ishimoto As-sociates, the foundation's repre-centation sentative

The foundation was estab-lished to honor the activity of Chiune Sugihara, a Japanese diplomat stationed in Lithuania during World War II. His bravery in writing over 6000 visas to Pol-ish Jews in the face of the 1940 Nazi invasion has been honored by the Yad Vashem Memorial in Israel. VFLF's mission is to per-petuate the legacy of Chiune Sugihara by recognizing and honoring the brave work of diplomats worldwide who perform notable humanitarian acts of hero ism

Renee Tajima-Peña receives 1998 Steve Tatsukawa Memorial Fund Award

LOS ANGELES-"When you're an Asian American, it's unusual to see somebody on film who reminds you of yourself," observes Sansei filmmaker Renee Tajima-Peña, recipient of this year's Steve Tat-sukawa Memorial Fund Award. The award was established in 1985 to continue the late arts adminis-trator's legacy of commitment to fair representation of Asian Pacific mericans in the media. The Harvard-Radcliffe educated filmmaker and community activist recalls that when she first chanced to view some early documentaries to view some early documentaries produced by the group Visual Com-munications at the Japanese American Community Center in Pasadena, Calif., "I was absolutely blown away. Before that I never even imagined that an Asian American could be a filmmaker"

Since then she has directed many films including her personal documentary, My America ... or Honk if You Love Buddha, and the President Clinton signs bone marrow legislation targeting underrepresented minorities

On July 16, President Clinton signed into law the National Bone Marrow Registry Reauthorization Act of 1998 allowing the National Marrow Donor Program (NMDP) to continue and expand its crucial work. The 10-year-old program facilitates the matching of patients with unrelated individuals willing to give life-saving marrow. Under this new act, the NMDP will receive $18 million in funding in its first year and autho-rized congressional spending for the following four years. For organizations like Asians for Miracle Marrow Matches (A3M), with the goal to educate, recruit, and register potential donors, this legislation will be a significant stepping stone towards increased chances for minority patients in search of matching marrow. The Reauthorization Act not only emphasizes increasing the number of suitably matched transplants, suitably matched transplants, but it specifically targets those for minorities, stating that "Such program shall identify populations that are underrep-resented among potential donors" and work towards "increasing the representations of racial and ethnic minority groups."

As a member of the NMDP network, A3M has played a strategic and unique part in this program. A3M focuses on the Asian and Pacific Islander (API) communities in Southern California to increase and diversify the national donor database in order to help API patients. One out of every four API donors on the NMDP reg-ASM. Still, only 1.5 percent of the transplants have been for API patients.

Therefore, the Reauthoriza-tion Act has laid down the same key points that have also been the reasons for A3M's activities in the last seven years - that there is a great need for minority representation, even within the realm of bone marrow registries. The legislation empha-sizes the need for equal access to potential donors, and ultimately, to health care.

URING A FAMILY DIS-CUSSION, one of our daughters casually men-ed that her high school counsellor had discouraged her from mak-ing applications to colleges that were deemed "academically chalng." While not at the head of her high school class, neither was she anywhere near the bottom. She she anywhere near the bottom. She was about in the upper fifth, this in a school located in a predominantly Jewish area where academic achievement was highly regarded. She enrolled in a small Catholica-filiated college located about a mile filiated college horated about a mile from our home; there she enjoyed her first two years of higher educa-tion making new friends and learning to play the guitar. For the remaining two years, she transferred to the University of Pennsylvania, a -called "ivy school." This information

I recalled a somewhat similar ex-perience that I had had while in the army. IN 1944, I was called to active duty and was shipped down to Camp Robinson, Arkansas where, with haole (white) recruits from the midwest and the Mason-Dixon border states (and one other Nikkei recruit), I underwent weeks of in-fantry training. Our company com-mander was a haole captain — best as I can recall his name was "Camp bell" — as were the company staff bell" — as were the company stau, the first sergeant, company clerk, and so on. As our basic infantry training period neared its end, I put in for admission to O.C.S. (Officer Candidate School) down at Ft. Ben-

He opined, and I believe in sincerity, that be-cause of my ethnicity. I didn't have a chonce of receiving a second a chance of receiving an appoint-ment to Ft. Benning. Figuring I had nothing to lose, I let the application stay in anyway. At our company's final formation, an announcement was made that two members of the company re-ceived appointments to Ft. Benning. One was mine. AS FATE would have it, a telegram came from Ft. Snelling (Minnesota) under the name of a (Minnesota) under the name of a Major Rush, directing that I report, to Snelling to undergo language training, which this PFC (Private First Class) of course did. One day I was summoned by the first sergeant to report to the company sergeant to report to the company headquarters. Something about a visitor. I had no idea who in the world it could be. It was Captain Campbell! He was on his way to a new assignment and had stopped by to see how I was coming along. I was flabbergasted. I was touched by this captain's action in tracking my whereabouts and taking time out to visit with this PPC. I'll never forget

UPON COMPLETING my studies at Snelling, I received my second stripe promoting me to T-5 (Techni-cian Fifth Grade). After a furlough cond nigh visiting family (in Chicago), I re-ported back to Snelling, prepared to be shipped out with my company. I had packed my duffel bag and tossed it aboard the truck which was headed for a rail head. Just as the truck was about to move out. the first sergeant came out, bel-lowed out my name, and instructed me to retrieve my duffel bag. I was (again) being held back.

In the next column I'll explain what happened.

and write Nihongo. But my brother and I were more interested in learning American cuss words and the con-tents of the TV Guide than in buckling down and memorizing hiragana and katakana (never mind kanji!).

Now, I regret my slothfulness. I that if I could read and know that if I could read and write Japanese — especially that icky kanji — Id have a good chance of working in a job with Japanese or for a Japanese com-pany. Instead, here I am solidly in my middle ages, thinking a lot about Japan and Japanese peo-ple, without actually being able to communicat directly with them know municate directly with them communicate directly with them. The worst part is that even my conversational Japanese is lousy, because I was too young when we moved to the States to have a very developed vocabulary, and very developed vocabulary, and simply because I haven't used my feeble speaking skills hardly at all. Like many Nikkei I know, Ive grown up with my parents. (or mom, at least) speaking lots of Japanese to me, and replying all my life in English. When I'm in a situation where I'm ermet di to reply in Jaranese

I'm expected to reply in Japanese, the little bit of conversational Ni-hongo I've locked up in my brain on a jailbreak goes on a jailbreak, and even the most common of words and phrases seem to escape me.

For example, my grandmother in Hokkaido called me late one night to wish me a Happy Ne Year and to ask how I was. I tried to fake it as grogginess from being woken in the middle of the night by the call, but my reply in halt-ing Japanese finally disintegrat-ed into stammering English, which of course obachan couldn't under stand at all. She finally understand at all. She maily laughed and teased me for not knowing Nihongo, but she under-stood: I was too Americanized. One time during college, I was invited to be part of an exhibit of City. Though I was flattered and even sold my painting in the show, I didn't remain a part of this group because I felt uncomfort-able. The other artists were all very warm and eager to include me in their organization, but I was embarrassed at not being able to converse with them in their language. There were English-speaking members in the groups, and in fact, one sculptor was a Caucasian Columbia Uni-versity professor who was the longtime companion of a Japan-ese artist. But I felt inferior in longtim these great people's presence. Maybe it was because I was intimidated artistically too, but I felt too much an outsider because of my poor language skills.

As an adult. I've tried taking ssons at the Buddhist Temple, from Midori Sensei, who is patient and engaging and support-ive, but I was a lazy student and didn't continue the lessons long enough. I apologize, Sensei, and I will someday return to class!

I've even tried learning more vocabulary and some basic read-ing and writing from a couple of CD-ROMS, which were some-what helpful, but bored me after a while. They both had one feature I didn't need: Sound samples of words as they should be pronounced Thankfully, that's one part of my Japanese that doesn't need too much help. My accent is pretty good for an American. I even know to pronounce "sumimasen" "suima

So even though my Nihongo is limited, at least I can speak the words I know with an Issei's perpronunciation.

Sure, they're simple words and basic phrases that an eight-year-old might know, like, "Excuse me, but where is the bathroom?"

But hey, don't laugh -important phrase! - it's an

I THERE and welcome to HITHENE and welcome to my first column for the Pacific Citizen. My name is Brian Niiya, and I've been writing a column on Japanese American history and culture for the Rafu Shimpo (a Los Angeles Japanese American daily) titled Japanese American daily' tuted "Spoiled Sansei" for the last four-plus years. I am 37 years old and a native of L.A., but have been living in Honolulu for the last two years. I am married and have a years. I am married and have a four-month-old daughter. I have worked for a number of Japanese American/ Asian American orga-nizations for the last decade or so, most notably the Japanese American National Museum, where I've held many different positions since 1987.

positions since 1987. I find myself a bit bewildered to be writing for the P.C. after all these years. This is because I have previously vowed never to join the JACL. I have two major sets of reasons for this. You've probably heard many of these criticisms before. One set of reasons is historical. As a Sansei with a background in Asian American/Ethnic Studies, I have read a lot about the history of the JACL, particularly their actions during World War II. Like most serious students of the history of internment, I was dismayed by what I learned and found myself in disagreement with the actions of JACL leaders of the time. More significantly, I have been dismayed by the organization's unwillingness to seriously explore their own history, given the numbers of people both inside and outside the organization who feel as I do about events of the past. The most notable example of this unwillingness is the soof this unwillingness is the so-called Lim Report episode of a few years back, where the report of a JACL sponsored researcher was essentially suppressed seem-ingly because it confirmed many of the accusations levied by crit-ics of the organization. In future columns, I hope to address some of these points in much greater detail

The other set of reasons as to why I hadn't considered joining JACL have to do with contempo-rary issues of relevance. Within rary issues of relevance. Within the Japanese American commu-nity, it seems that other organi-zations have done a better job than the JACL in responding to the needs of their core con-stituency, the Nisei. In this post-redress era, it seems clear that the main concern of the Nisei is no longer divid in the rather it is the main concern of the Nisei is no longer civil rights, rather, it is leaving behind a fitting legacy for its accomplishments. Somewhere in the last decade, organizations like the Japanese American Na-tional Museum, the National Japanese American Historical Society, and the various monti-ment organized long with legal ment groups, along with local historical societies and camp reunion groups, have stolen the thunder of the JACL. Money and attention which might have gone to JACL have gone and are going to all of these other groups instead Whether this shift in Nisei priorities is a good thing or not is an-other topic. (Of course I don't think it is.) But I fear that a think it is.) but I fear that a Japanese American civil rights organization may no longer be a viable concept, because most Japanese Americans just aren't interested in civil rights anymore. So why am I here? Well, for one thing, despite all that's bad about JACL, there is a lot that is good as well. Though one may quibble with this or that, the JACL played a pivotal role in overturning discriminato-role in overturning discriminato-role in overturning discriminato-role and the redress movement as

I recently saw firsthand JACL's current relevance. Re-cently, the Honolulu Chapter cently, the Honolulu-Chapter sought the help of the rest of the organization in the confirmation of Judge Susan Oki-Mollway, which was being held up in Con-gress. The scope, resources, and connections of the JACL were pivotal in securing her comfirma-ion of the organization tion — no other organization could have done what JACL did in this case in this case. It is also true that JACL is not a monolithic organization and that many individual chapters and regions do tremendous work locally. When I moved to Hawaii, locally. When I moved to Hawan, I sought to get involved in the Japanese American community there and much to my surprise, found that the Honolulu Chapter was at the forefront of many issues I wanted to be involved with

The Honolulu Chapter is a relthe Honolulu Chapter is a rel-atively recent phenomenon, hav-ing been formed long after World War II. It is mostly populated by professional types about my age (that is, in their 30s and 40s). The (that is, in their 30s and 40s). The two issues which seem to have put them on the map here are re-dress and Bruce Yamashita. They have been active in helping various groups of Hawaii Japan-ese Americans who were dis-placed (but not necessarily in-mend) during the ware hormed placed (but not necessarily in-terned) during the war become eligible for redress. They have also been staunch supporters of Yamashita, a Japanese American who sought (and is seeking) legal who sought (and is seeking) regat remédies for being improperly dismissed from the Marine Corps Officer Candidate School on ac-count of race a few years back. My colleagues in the Honolulu chapter believe the JACL is still relevant in the post-redress era and want to work with the orga-nization so that it appeals more to younger Japanese Americans and to anyone interested in fight-ing for the civil rights of any group that needs it. Power movement here), I think the work they are doing locally is worth supporting. As for the JACL as a whole, my attitude is somewhat ambiva-lent. While I wonder about both its past and its future, I recognize that it has resources, connec-tions, and name recognition that no other Japanese American — or for that/matter Asian American — organization can match. JACL can play a major and positive role in many contemporary thing was that I be comfortable and confident in my own skin — relatives be dammed! Okay, now for the test. I'm leaving for another visit to Japan next week and I will have to see whether or not I can maintain this positive "I love myself" image in the face of re-ality. To be quite honest, I'm a little skeptical about how much last year's epiphany will really change my behavior. In fact, I don't seem to be any different at all — I'm already worried about all — I'm already worried about the impression I will make when I show up with my face all brown from a summer in the Los Angeles sun (Japan reveres white skin), and if my aunt will white skin, and it in y auth win think the purple toenail polish I have on is inappropriate for a woman my age. I try and push these kinds of trivial, superfi-cial concerns out of my head,

What's difficult is that I can not prove my maturity or my intelligence to my relatives and thus make myself feel better. They cannot read my column or the articles I write I cannot talk to them at length about my taik to them at length about my view of the world or start lofty discussions about race politics because my grade-school vocab-ulary wouldn't permit it. (They probably wouldn't be that impressed anyways.)

Sadly, I am not able to ex-press myself in a way that I feel will help them to understand what kind of person I am, what kind of person I'm trying to be. All they are able to do is know me on a superficial level — in my case, this is not always a my case, this is not always a good thing. It is particularly unfortunate because Japanese people have a way of being brutally frank in their opinions. You thought Japanese were polite to a fault, afraid of offending or express-ing themselves openly? Think acain! again!

I'm generalizing of course, but I've found that as soon as a certain level of familiarity ex-Japanese people do not back: You've gained hold weight. That color doesn't suit you at all. You look better with makeup. That outfit is really ugly. Ouch!!

I suppose some people may find this honesty to be refresh-ing, but it can really make you paranoid about what others are thinking. Very early on, you learn to go with the flow, to nev-er be the nail that sticks out and has to be pounded down. Of course, if you're American, that kind of thinking is all wrong. Here, you're got to be creative, do your own thing, be an indi-vidual. The problem is that when you are both Japanese and American, these signals can sometimes get crossed and you end up not doing what you end up not doing what you're expected to do but then caring what people think about it. It can be an awkward situation

Last year I realized that this Last year I realized that this predicament was natural, that it was part of being Japanese American. I told myself not to worry about what I couldn't change — relax and Japan would be much more enjoyable. But now I'm thinking it's im-ressible to change a complete But now I'm thinking it's im-possible to change so complete-ly and to stop wanting to be someone my relatives admire and respect. It's part of the cul-tural baggage that I necessarily carry around with me and I don't know that I'll ever get rid of it. Maybe I don't even want to The concurrent through the to. To see yourself through the eyes of others and be aware of how cultures intersect and diverge is not necessarily a bad thing. It can help you learn a lot — at least that's what I'm telling myself this year. Next trip I could argue something completely different. ■

I mean, the post-Nisei generations are publicly acknowledging their forebears who fought racism during World War II as gutsy GIs of the all-Nisei 442nd Regimental Combat Team. Notwithstanding opinions that Nisei Week is losing public inter-est judging by the diminishing number of spectators, comfort reigned this year in not having to fight the crowds that had jammed the sidewalks of East First Street in yestelyears. The riveting per-formance of the UC Irvine taiko dummers, and about 300 ondoists traipsing three or four steps for-ward and maybe three backward to the lively strains of Tanko Bushi, Kumamoto Ondo, Oohara Bushi and other dances, convey a Nisei Week touch that's culturally sound

One final thought: Little Tokyo "Matsuri," (Japanese for "festi-val") was my preferred title when the festival was being revived. That would have skirted all the free-for-alls that sprout now and then to rename Nisei Week. But in 1948-49, it was deemed more important, publicity-wise, to have the word Nisei replace the head-line use of term Jap. PACIFIC CITIZEN, SEPT. 4-17, 1998

Re: Time to guit whining

Regarding the question posed in Bill Hosokawa's column 8/21/98, "Is it time for JAs to stop whining about our wartime intermment?" This question, he says, originated with Rafu Shimpo columnist George Yoshinaga. He concludes the column answering his question in the affirmative in the affirmative.

Is he kidding?

Is ne klading? The August 21st edition of the Pacific Citizen, in which Hosokawa's column appears, has an article about how the Civil Libwhich erties Public Education Fund has enable ed so many of us to tell our enanced so many ways. Another ar-ticle describes how the Washington, D.C., JACL Chapter has developed a speaker's bureau to send Japan-ese Americans out into the commu-

Was not the telling of the story of our intermment an important part of receiving redress? And is it not incumbent upon all of us to do this to prevent this American tragedy from happening to anyone else? An Hosokawa's article, he men-tions the popularity of the camp re-umions of late. If the camps were so terrible, why do all these folk want to come back to the site of such un-pleasantness? That question was answired by Supreme Court Chief Justice Arthur Goldberg at the CWRIC hearing at Los Angeles in August of 1981. As I recall, the late Senator Sam Hayakawa tried to ator Sam Hayakawa tried t imize the impact of the camp wa tried to using Hosokawa's reasoning. Jus-tice Goldberg replied that survivors of the Nazi death camps continue to have reunions. He asked "does that make their experience less horrible?" Hosokawa goes on to say that at the reunions we can share warm recollections and rekindle friend-ships. In the main, we have come sings. In the main, we have come through the camp experience in-tact, so let's stop whining about what happened so long ago. I would have less of a problem with a proposal such as Hosokawa's coming from someone else. Some one perhaps, who provided more media support when the battle for redress was being fought. Then again, I suppose his proposal is constent with the positio n he has tak en on redress through the years.

Fund-raising suggestions for the Memorial Foundation

The supplement in the Pacific Citizen Aug. 7-20 issue provided the first overall coverage of the steps taken by the National Japanese American Memorial Foundation (NJAMF), which unfortunately is the giving the Japanese American too similar to Japanese American National Museum (JANM), and likely to be misidentified.

This East Coast based group with highly selected board and di-rectors appears to have been meet-ing periodically to discuss and re-solve many issues relevant to the crection of a national monument for erection of a hational monument for the past six years. While they are to be congratulated for coordination and successful fund-raising among their peers, the bottom line is the amount collected to date.

In the past several years, the fund drive has fulfilled about a third of the goal, so now NJAMF faces the task of collecting about $6 million in one year, while competing for funds with JANM and the 100th/420nd/MIS Foundation. As an interested observer, I would like to offer the following sug-gestions to NJAMF: a. Request support from JACL and other Nikkei organizations. While 16 JACL units have con-tributed to date, there are more than 90 other chapters and regions which should be willing to support.

Among major donors are JACLers Cressy Nakagawa, Peter Okada, Clarence Nishizu, Mrs. Mike Masaoka, Dr. Mae Takahashi, He-len Kawagoe, Dr. Frank Sakamoto, Bill Hosokawa, Joe Ichiuji, Jim Miyazaki, Patrick Okura and Kaz Oshibi. Oshiki.

Re: G.I. Joe salutes JA soldiers of the 442nd

It is the morning of July 4th. I had been relaxing and catching up on the latest issue of your newspaper after four consecutive nights on duty at the fireworks stand for the Montebello Optimist when I ran across this wonderful article "G.I. Joe salutes the WWII JA soldiers of the 442nd." When I finished reading it omething really stood out. I the article referred to the 442nd the article reterred to the 442nd as a "crack infantry regiment" and then later referred to it as a "battalion." Later still, when speaking of the number of casual-ties suffered in a citations earned, it is referred to as the "442nd Diit is referred to as the "442nd Di-

Tabulation method in Census 2000 important for minority groups the Population Division of the U.S. Bureau of the Census, has proposed five methods in his re-"Approaches For Developing Tabulations of Race Data From The 2000 Census.

Full Racial Distribution

The Full Racial Distribution approach would report the "ma-jor" race reported alone AND all possible combinations of these races separately. This would report ALL possible racial combina-tions. Under this method, mul-tiracial people will NOT be counted as part of their monoracial communities. Instead, each combination would represent a mu-tually exclusive racial group. This method could result in dramatic drop in population from the traditional racial categories. It has also been criticized as thas also been clucked as being administratively burden-some. For most government agencies, there are five major cat-egories of race (Ahnerican Indian and Aläskan Native; Asian; or African American; Na tive Hawaiian and Other Pacific Islander; and White) and 26 possible combinations of these five categories for a total of 31 pos bilities for identification. The Census has the additional cate-gory of "Some Other Race." This results in six major categories and 57 possible combinations for a total of 63 racial categories.

All Inclusive The All Inclusive method tabulates respondents who select a single racial category together with those who select that racial category in combination with one or more races. For example, if a respondent marked Asian and White, he or she would be count-ed as a member of BOTH racial categories.

This distribution will add up to more than 100 percent of the population; some respondents will appear in more than one cat-egory. (It is unclear if data re-flecting the nature of the mul-tiracial population will be kept racial population will be kept ad made available to the public, although some sources familiar with the inner workings of the Census Bureau say that such data will be available.) The All Inclusive method presents serious problems for statisticians because they would not be able to compare statistics from the 2000 Census with past prior census data

Collansing

The Collapsing method would only count multiple respondents separately if the number of a multiracial population reached a sumber deemod cirrefeort by number deemed significant by the Census Bureau. Under this method, the overall number of racial categories will be expanded; however, they will not accu-rately represent ALL existing racial combinations and the re sponses by some multiracial people will be disregarded. For example, if the number of people who identify as Asian and Native American is considered suffi-American is considered sum-ciently small by the Census Bu-reau, this multiracial category would be "collapsed" and would not appear as a separate racial category. It is not clear where people in the collapsed categories will be tobulated nor is it clear will be tabulated, nor is it clear what the threshold number to recognize a separate racial catewould be

Combining or Priority Reassignment

The Combining or Priority Re-assignment method would not not track multiracial respondents separately. Instead, each multiracial respondent would be tab-ulated only once as a member of the racial group to which they belong that has the smallest na-tional population. For example, an African American/Native American would be tabulated only as a Native American (the racial group with the smallest population). This method has the potential of bolstering numbers of the smallest racial minorities at the expense of more populated racial groups and ignores the fact that multiracial people can iden-tify with more than one racial category. There is speculation that this is the preferred method of tabulation.

Igorithmic

The Algorithmic method (also known as the "Allocation" or "Im-putation" method) entails reassigning multiple racial responses signing multiple racial responses into one of the major racial cate-gories. Four mathematical for-mulas are being considered in conjunction with this method. First is the "Fractional Variant" which would split multiple race respondents equally among the racial categories selected. Second andom Reassignment the "R Variant" which, as the name suggests, would randomly reassign multiple racial responses into one of the "major" racial cate-gories. Third is the "Whole Reassignment or Imputation Variant" which, according to del Pinal's report, would assign "multiple race responses to one of the major categories based on an imputation technique, such as the nearest neighbor of previous observation with similar characteristics, with similar characteristics, which may or may not take into account the reported races." Fourth is the "Proportional Dis-tribution Variant" which would distribute "the multiple race responses proportionally to the ma-jor racial categories. For example, if there are 100 multiple responses, and the balance popula-tion is 70 percent White; 15 per-cent Black; 10 percent Asian; and 5 percent American Indian, then 70 respondents would be placed in the White category, 15 in Black, 10 in Asian, and 5 in American Definition and 5American Indian

This method and its accompa nying formulas is not likely to be ed. In addition to not directly tabulating the multiple racial responses, it raises constitutional stions by counting people in que fractions, similarly to how slaves were tabulated prior to the adoption of the Thirteenth Amend ment

Making A Decision

Selecting a final tabulation method is a complicated process. The members of the politically appointed 2000 Census Advisory Committee will make a recommendation to the Secretary of Commerce sometime this fall on which method the Census Bu-reau should adopt. Ramona Douglass, president of the Associa-tion of Multiethnic Americans (AMEA), is the only member of the advisory committee representing the multiracial community. It is unclear whether the other members of the advisory committee will advocate for a method that will allow multiracial people to be counted accurately or a method that serves their respective communities best at the expense of multiracial people.

Hapa Issues Forum (HIF) has not endorsed any of the proposed tabulation methods. The All Inclusive method, if it tracks mul-tiracial populations, may be best for the mixed race people because it would recognize them as full members of each racial community that they identify with and also recognizes the boundaries of the multiracial community. Issei, 100, dies months after naturalization

SEATTLE-Asano Kanzaki, 100, who received her citizen-ship papers last spring after 81 years in the United States, died June 27 at Keiro Nursing Home. Two U.S. senators, five state supreme court justices and hundreds of friends had joined Kanzaki last March when she was naturalized.

Kanzaki arrived in the U.S. with her husband in 1917 at Seattle. While her husband worked in a laundry, Kansaki worked at home raising her children. They had six children; the first child died of pneumonia when she was only two weeks old. The second child. Akira, died during the 442nd's Arno River campaign in 1943 while the family was interned at Minidoka WRA camp. Al-though the elder Kanzakis, as Issei, were not yet permitted to become citizens or own real es-tate, they taught their Nisei sons their own rules of honor: America is your country, and you must defend it.

The explanation given by her children as to why she hadn't become a citizen sooner is that she just didn't have enough time; She was a seamstre typesetter and hotel maid.

Her youngest son, Hitoshi, said, "The importance of family has always been with her ... For her to become a United States citizen, it is an additional honor to be bestowed on the family name

Vance Oyama, NASA Biochemist

Vance Oyama, a NASA biochemist whose experiments in '70s led him to believe that the no life would be found on the planet Mars, died July 27 at his home in Middletown, Calif., at age 76.

As chief of the life detection branch at NASA's Ames Research Center, Oyama designed one of three experiments placed aboard the two Viking landers that were intended to determine if there were microorganisms in the Martian soil, which would indicate the existence of life on the planet. His laboratory-in-a-shoe-box reached Mars in 1976. In the experiment, wa ter and a number of nutrients

Doing "The Hump"

BY MIKA TANNER ial to the Pacific Citis

When I was first asked to do a review of the new Santa Monica, Calif., sushi bar, "The Hump," I thought, "The Hump?" What kind of name is that for a sushi place I had visions of an aggressively trendy eatery where obnoxious customers ordered "saki bomb" cktails and the men dared each other to eat chunks of wasabi in fits of machismo bonding. Ive been to these kind of places before, and I preferred not to have to go again

Fortunately, I soon found that my fears were totally unfounded. In fact, once I got over the name, "The Hump" was one of the best Japanese restaurants I've been to Japanese restaurants I've been to in Los Angeles. Learning that the creative force behind "The Hump" was Hiro Nishihura, celebrated chef of Dis Angeles restaurants Katsu and R23, I was not surprised

Located in the Santa Monica Airport, "The Hump" boasts an in-timate setting that combines an impressive sushi bar with a cozy nine-table seating arrangement. With the smooth sounds of Miles Davis playing and the romance of watching small private planes taking off and landing, it was easy to feel transported to another world.

"The Hump" offers a traditional à la carte menu of sushi as well as nightly specials of seafood dishee such as baby abalene and soft-shell crab. At the helpful recom-mendation of our waitress (Chris, burgers and La however, my companion and I de however, my companion and J de-cided to leave our fate in the expe-rienced hands behind the sushi counter and go for the Chef's Spe-cial. Chris explained that it changed daily, depending on what fresh fish was available, caught locally or flown in that day from Japan. She assured us a heavenly experience.

experience. And she was right. For $50 a person, the Chef's Special was a spectacular seven course meal that allowed the chef to exercise his culinary and artistic talents. Our first course was a small salad of plump cooked clams and tender green onions in a lively miso-vinaigrette which was then fol-Vinaigretice was then lot-lowed by a trio of bite-sized appe-tizers including a Japanese sar-dine tempura roll garnished with a surprising though subtle dab of salsa, a gem of monkfish pate topped with smoked salmon, and with a delicate jelled sauce. Though it may sound unusual, it was very similar to what is often served at upscale restaurants in Japan, where chefs are not re-stricted by American ideas of Japanese cuisine. Next, Chris served us a salad of perfectly seared tuna sashimi atop a bed of greens and lightly dressed with a citrus y sauce that complimented the fish beautifully. r that came delicate slices of Aft Atter (that came delicate shoes of a,i, Spanish mackerel that were seasoned with lime, garlic, and salsa, each piece decorated with a tiny sliver of jalapeño. Again, this sounds like some funky fusion cre-ation, but the combination of fla-methods and delicated delicated and the source of t vors was subtle and delicious rather than overpowering. This dish practically inspired my eat-ing partner to shed tears of joy.

Although we were beginning to feel full, the dishes kept coming. feel full, the dishes kept coming. For our next course, we sampled soft-shell crab and rock shrimp tempura laced with ponzu sauce and sprinkles of red pepper. Al-though-decadent and tasty, the tempura was marred by a too-thick batter which was a little sog-gy from the sauce. The crispy lightness that makes tempura so distinct from other fried foods was distinct from other fried foods was

As a fi-nale, we were brought a plate of selected nigiri sushi that featured imported Japanese sardines, sea urchin, scallops, amaebi (sweet shrimp) and daikon. All of it was delinging: The meel orded with a shrimp) and daikon. All of it was delicious. The meal ended with a fruit plate and a pot of fresh oo-long and ginseng mixed tea, which I definitely recommend try-ing. Smoky and flavorful, it was the perfect way to wrap up the evening and feel uttry spoiled and content. Too bad we didn't have a plane outside waiting to take us to the Bahamas — oh to the Bahamas oh the U.S. Supreme Court allowed blatantly discriminatory laws to continue. "Separate but equal" continue. Separate but equal laws in Plessy vs. Ferguson, which affirmed the Jim Crow laws of Louisiana, as well as the civil rights cases of 1883, which allowed restaurants and other places of public accommodation to discrimiate on the basis of race, and the Alien Land Act are just a few ex-amples that demonstrate that racial discrimination was allowed in our country. Supreme Court justices went

Supreme Court justices went through mental gymnastics to con-clude that the 14th Amendment did not apply to private discrimina-tion or to federal laws abolishing the Ku Klux Klan. In 1883, when blacks were fighting for the opportunity to be served in restaurants. Justice Bradley, writing the major-ity opinion in the civil rights cases, stated that blacks should stop endeavoring to obtain "special treatment ment." More than 100 years later, cre-ators of Initiative 200 carry on the same burning cross rhetoric and in-tellectual dishonesty as Justice Bradley. Wrapping themselves in the Constitution, backers of 1-200 assert that nobody is entitled to special treatment. Nobody is entispecial treatment. Nobody is enti-tled to special treatment, and no body is getting any special treat-ment. Unfortunately, backers of Proposition 209 and Initiative 200 would have you believe that there is no disparity between men and women or racial minorities.

question for the next millennium should be, "Will we still continue to beat our wives and our brothers?" At the National Convention in Philadelphia, JACL passed a reso-lution that allocated $20,000 to support efforts to defeat Initiative 200. Altogether, National JACL has donated $25,000 for this cause. This is money that is well spent if we are to establish credibility as a national organization that is cated to the elimination of dis dedi rim ination and the promotion of civil rights. The battle is not over. We must continue our efforts as a na-tional body and as American citizens.

Every 10 years, the census re-sults based on sampling are used to determine how legislative districts are drawn and how federal dollars are meted out. As a result of this decision, California will lose as much as $1 billion in future funding, money that would normally go towards education and the transit and highway systems

As Narasaki mentioned, several APA groups and individuals who defended the constitutionality of census sampling in the law suit will be appealing the deci-sion. They will be represented by the National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium and its af-filiates, the Asian American Le-gal Defense & Education Fund and the Asian Pacific American Legal Center.
