In Search of Earl M. Finch

By MARTHA NAKAGAWA Assistant Editor

Although Earl Melvin Finch touched the lives of thousands of Nisei soldiers, his own life is shrouded in mystery, due in part, because the man rarely spoke about himself.

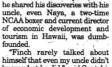

Whenever he met with the Nisei, he never said things like This is what I did or Let me show you these pictures," said Mark Santoki, editor of the Hawaii Herald, who wrote a four-part series on Finch. "He always into what you did

Vice President Gore Proposes $4.8 Million Initiative to Preserve WWII-Era Internment Camps

Vice president Al Gore an-nounced on Feb. 2 that the most comprehensive report ever on the ory and status of World War II internment camps will be released this week, and proposed $4.8 million for a new initiative to help preserve several of these sites throughout the West.

The National Park Service report, which is now available, describes the history and current conditions of relocation centers and other facilities where approximately 120,000 Japan Americans were interned during WWII. The administration's FY 2001 budget will seek funding to acquire some of these historic sites and to construct visitor facilities and exhibits.

The relocation and internment of American citizens during World War II is a vital chapter in our history," said Vice President Gore. "Today we take an impor tant step to honor and pres the experience of Japanese Americans who paid a dear price and persevered during one of our na-tion's most trying hours."

The Park Service report, titled "Confinement and Ethnicity: An Overview of World War II Japanese American Internment Camp Sites," is the most exhaustive survey ever of the 35 sites associ-ated with the relocation and internment of JAs during the war.

The sites, most in remote areas of the West, include War Reloca-

The proposed FY 2001 funding would be used to construct a new visitor center at the Manzanar National Historic Site in California; to acquire and protect other former camp sites; to construct an interpretive exhibit near a former work camp in Arizona; and to begin a Park Service study of "World War II on the Home

This is truly a remarkable initiative on the administration's part," said John Tateishi, JACL national director. "The Japanese American community has struggled for years to find ways to pre-serve the sites of the former camps. Santoki found Finch's story so compelling that he is now writing a book on the man's life. "In all my years in journalism, I've nevcome across a story where I can keep lifting different rocks and finding something new. Usu-ally after a couple of months, I get bored and move on to the next subject, but with this subject, people keep calling me up and writing me letters. It hasn't stopped."

Santoki even received a letter from a Brown University neuro-surgeon, who is originally from Mississippi. This neurosurgeon was so struck by Finch's contributions that he purchased space on the Japanese American Na-tional Museum's donor wall in memory of Earl Finch. Finch's name was not new to

But not everyone supported Finch. Among Finch's Hatties-burg neighbors, Finch was ostra-cized as a "Jap lover," and even his fiancée broke off an engagement after Finch started interacting with the Nisei soldiers, ac-acting with the ruser somers, according to Santoki.

Santoki also collected documentation showing that Finch was under investigation by the FBI as a possible spy for Emperor Hirohito. Even Hawai's Emergency Services Committee sus-pected Finch of being a con artist, trying to swindle money from the Nisei.

"I have one account where Finch is walking with Nisei men in New Orleans and the FBI came up to him and stopped him for his ID," said Santoki. "Finch was shaking, but things like this

BLYTHE, Calif.—An immigra-tion-reform group has erected an anti-illegal immigrant billboard near the California-Arizona border, prompting the ire of civil rights leaders who say they will

National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium Produces New COMMENTARY Census 2000 Video in 11 Asian and Pacific Islander Languages

The National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium (NA-PALC) announced the availability of an instructional video titled "Census 2000: A Guide for Asian or an instructional video titled "Census 2000: A Guide for Asian Pacific Americans." The 20-minute video, made possible through AT&T, explains the imortance of full participation in ensus 2000 for the APA communities and provides instructions on how to complete the census form.

The video was produced in 11
Asian and Pacific Islander languages and dialects including English, Cantonese, Mandarin, Korean, Vietnamese, Tagalog (Filipino), Ilocano (Filipino), Hmong, Lao, Kmer, Thai and Samoan.

The video provides an overview of Census 2000, including how census data is used, and discusses the importance the census data will have for the future of the APA communities. The video also re-views in detail questions found on the census form and includes inctions on how to answer them

The U.S. Census Bureau estimated that 2.3 percent of APAs were undercounted in the 1990 sus, Undercounts are considered significant since census data is used for hundreds of purposes, from the apportionment of congressional seats and the creation of legislative districts to the allocation of over $180 billion in federal and state funds for programs such as education, transportation and health care.

The video, produced with significant in-kind support from the National Digital Television Center, a subsidiary of AT&T, has been distributed nationally to Asian language TV stations and community organizations. KSCI and the International Channel have committed to broadcasting the video. "Since many members of our community are immigrants who are unaccustomed to completing the census, having a culturally-specific video in several Asian Pacific languages goes a long way to-ward reaching the hardest-to-reach people in our community," said Karen Narasaki, executive ctor of the Consortium.

"A census awareness campaign among Asian Pacific Americans is one of the most important initia-tives we support," said Esther Sil-ver-Parker, AT&T Foundation president. "An accurate count is mportant not just to Asian Pacific American communities but is fundamental to Census 2000 overall."

The Census 2000 video is part of a comprehensive campaign by the Consortium — Asian Pacific Americans Count in Census 2000 — to inform and educate the community about the latest census. The campaign is the largest natality to local soldiers.

Finch, then living in Hattiesburg, opened the Earl Finch Company, an army surplus store that offered clothes and goods to thousands of soldiers stationed in nearby Camp Shelby, He also fed and entertained soldiers from all backrounds — American, Chinese rench, British.

Finch met his first Japanese American soldier in the summer of 1943. In standard Finch style, he invited the men for dinner. Years later, Finch recalled this encounter saying "they looked like the loneli-est human beings in the world."

Finch's mother, although con-fined to a wheelchair, prepared a hearty meal for her unexpected guests that evening. During din-ner Richard Chinen explained to Finch that they were volunteers from Hawaii for a segregated 442nd Regimental Combat Team.

To Finch, these men were noth-ing like what Mississippi Congress-man John Rankin had accused Rankin had publicly denounced the Nisei, saying they "are being sent into the South where we being sent into the South where we don't want them and where an invasion would surely occur if the Axis ever attempts it," and suggested that "instead of sending these Jap troops into Mississippi as they are now doing, they should be put into labor bettalions and be made to do manual labor."

The next day to Firch's surprise.

The next day, to Finch's surprise, he found the Nisei on his porch, talking and laughing with his mother. This was the first time any of the soldiers Finch had invited had returned, and they had even bought roses for Finch's mother as a show of appreciation. Impressed by this reciprocity, Finch began his lifelong commitment to helping Nikkei gain acceptance into American society.

Initially, Finch focused on the Hawaii Nisei, but when he learned about the plight of the mainland Nisei, whose parents were incar-cerated in U.S. concentration camps, Finch extended his invitaand donated them to the mess halls. Another time, Finch invited more than 600 Nisei to his ranch and held a barbeque.— In the spring of 1944, Finch held a dinner for 50 Nisei at a Little Rock, Ark., restaurant. The event, later recounted by Chef Maurice Zolotow in a November 1945 Sat-urday Evening Post interview, had shocked the culinary community when Finch instructed the chef to serve a 30-pound tuna raw. That night, every chef, cook and busboy in Little Rock was on hand to get a glimpse of the men eating raw fish. Finch even sponsored Nisei sports teams because the 442nd in-cluded some of the best athletes in the country. When the Southern Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) Swimming Championships were held in New Orleans, Finch arranged for 10 Nisei to compete in the event. He took care of everything from reserving practice time at the University of Southern Mississippi's swimming pool to paying for train fare and hotel room at the sh Roosevelt Hotel The Nisei, several who were members of Pu-unene's famed "Three-Year Swim Club," dominated the event and clinched the team title. The victory was later celebrated at a fancy din ner, all compliments of Finch

Since the Nisei were neither welcomed at the "White USO (United Service Organization)" nor permit-ted into the "Black USO," Finch helped form the "Aloha USO," which became a lifeline between Camp Shelby Nisei soldiers and the outside world, particulary to in-terned families. For Easter 1944, Finch held a

From the airport, Finch's police-escorted car was followed by a 100-car motor-cade to Iolani Palace, where he was welcomed by Acting Gov. Gerald R. Corbett and the Royal Hawaiian Band. Finch's final reception was March 29, where more than 2,000 people turned out, and he was preented with a $10,000 check to continue his mainland hospital visits

During his speech, Finch thanked the audience but also urged them to remember the wounded. "Yesterday afternoon, I visited Schofield Barracks Hospital where I met a veteran who hadn't had a caller for three months. He cried when I came to talk to him. You don't have to go with a big bas-ket of gifts. Just a big handshake to

The tidal wave left 159 people dead, including 21 students and teachers from Laupahoeboe School. After hearing the news, Finch visited sev-eral Hattiesburg schools, including eral Hattiesburg schools, including an African American school, and was able to collect $150. On March 15, 1952, Finch re-turned to Japan to seek support for his foundation, and brought with him 10,000 letters from Hawaiian children that he had solicited, 100,000 pieces of bubble gum and 50,000 lollipope. In Tokye, Finch hosted a party for 10,000 under-privileged children where the 'Shelby Serenaders' entertained and the Tokyo Flyers baseball team made an appearance.

After Finch made arrangements with the U.S. Department of State and Ambassador of Japan for Naya's visa, Finch welcomed his "adopted" son at Honolulu Airport on May 28, 1952. Finch and MIS veteran Ralph Yempuku saw the potential of the emerging rock 'n' roll movement and brought several acts to Hawaii. Finch hobnobbed with the likes of Fabian, Chubby Checker, Frankie Avalon, the Beach Boys, Jerry Lee Lewis, Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens, Neil Sedaka, and Bo Diddley, just to name a few. The partners even hosted a presidential campaign benefit featuring Frank Sinatra on Oct. 2, 1960, for then-Sen. John F. Kennedy.

But by 1965, Finch had lost con tact with many of his Nisei friends tact with many of his Nisei friends who had families of their own. Naya and Sakamoto had also left home, and for the first tir was a man without a cau home, and for the first time, Finch was a min without a cause. In August 1965, Finch passed away alone at his home.

At his funeral, more than 300 people packed the Central Union Church to pay their last respects. The 442nd Veterans Club handled all the arrangements. Although Sen. Daniel K. Inouyé could not attend, he sent a telegram. We know he suffered from criticism from his neighbors. He was spat upon by some of them. But he continued in his pursuit of human brotherhood. After the war, he moved to Honolulu and became the first honorary member of the 442nd.

"Here was a man who started his one-man civil rights movement 22-1/2 years ago without fanfare, without demonstrations, without violence. And I think in many ways he was successful. We thank God that Earl Finch was there to greet us in Mississippi."

you are of my generation, which means you were an adult or close to it during WWII, you might have been surprised to see that this newspaper on Jan. 1 profiled the late James Omura as the journalist among "Influential Japanese Americans of the Past Century."

You might have asked, as I did, what about Larry Tajiri?

There is no doubt that for a brief time during the war years Omura exercised an important influence on the JA community. As the English section editor of a As the English section editor of a Japanese language newspaper in Denver, he espoused the cause of a handful of Nisei at the Heart Mountain WRA camp disobeying the Army's orders to appear for medical examination prior to in-duction under the Selective Ser-vice Act. Editorially, he encouraged their contention that the government had no right to call them into military service until it restored their civil rights.

For this activity he was ac was acquitted although draft re-sisters he supported were found

P.C. Under be made aright. P.C. Und Jajiri's editorship was a mora builder, an educational tool, an inspiration during the darkest days r JAs Tajiri made it their vo of defiance against the bigots. It is difficult to over-state the impor-tance P.C. was to JAs and their stirring recovery from the disas-trous war years. He left a noble heritage for succeeding editors

This is a position that I'm afraid is not clearly recognized by some of those who reached adult-hood after the war years. They correctly see heroism in Omura's gutsy stand, but they may not understand the profound influence that Tajiri had on the survival, postwar reconstruction and re-stored self-esteem of the JA com-munity. And this newspaper's recognition was about influence wasn't it?

their American-ness over their Japanese American-ness Interesting. I'd never heard it put quite that way.

ful" whereas the mainland Nisei were preoccupied in "emphasiz[ing]

ON THE SUBJECT of "differences," I've often wondered about differences between Nisei and Kibei. For present purposes, I define "Nisei" simply as persons of Japanese ancestry born and ted in the United States "Kibei" as an American of Japanese ancestry, also born and edu-cated in the United States who acquired a meaningful part of their early education in Japan. (What constitutes "meaningful" I leave that entirely up to you.)

THE FIRST KIBEI I met and got to know was one of the Take-ta twins from the O'Brien area of White River in the state of Washington. I was then in my early teens. While laboring in the fields this Taketa Kibei would sing Japanese songs. Silently lis-tening, I even picked up a few songs. His twin (Nisei) brother, songs. His twin (Nise) prouse, on the other hand, although friendly, was not given to joining his brother in belting out nani-wa-bushi (a form of Japanese singing).

SINCE THEN I've met and become acquainted with a number of Kibei fellows, principally in the internment camps Lake) and military service (Ft. Snelling, the MIS). During a tour of duty in postwar Japan I met yet another grouping of young Nikkei: Western educated who, at the outbreak of the Pacific war, were stranded in Japan, many obtaining employment as trans lators with the occupation forces A good number of such Nikkei were Japanese Canadians, a few from the United States.

While stationed in Sasebo (Kyushu) I'd occasionally phone the regional headquarters (in Kyoto). Nothing sensitive, just rou-tine calls utilizing the existing Japanese telephone lines. In placing long-distance calls, piacing iong-instance cails, the procedure was to notify the Japanese operator ("Shigai-onegai-shimasu") giving her your name and rank. Upon my doing so, the line momentarily went and the control of the piace of the control of the dead. Then the operator in-quired, in perfect English, "Are you, by any chance, from Kent, Washington?" At this point, the line again went dead, this time at my end. I was absolutely floored. It turned out that the operator had been a friend of a fellow whom I had known since childhood. Yes, it's a small, small world after all.

But I digress. Back to the Kibei-Nisei comparison.

BASED UPON my observations of and acquaintanceship with Kibei, I've tentatively formulated certain generalizations as to the differences between Kibei and Nisei. Kibei's core sense of his/her self-worth having been developed in a social milieu where his/her race was a non-factor or, at worst, a neutral factor, the Kibei has fewer hang-ups than U.S. Nisei. Consequently, Kibei folks much more readily adopt positions, including those considered by Nisei to be "sensi considered by Nisei we be sensi-tive" and controversial. The Nisei seeks to "play it safe." Enzyo (re-serve; reticence) permeates many facets of the Nisei being.

There will be voices Nisei and Kibei, and others — among Nisei and Kibei, and others — re-buking much, if not all that's been proffered here. Oh, well. ■

After leaving the bench, Bill Marutani resumed practicing law in Philadelphia. His column appears regularly in the P.C.

Masaoka here is speaking for the Nisei Lobby and the bit of legislation is the Lowry redress bill, a bill to provide redress as compen-sation to individuals. In a colloquy with the House committee, he launches an attack, with stun-ning overkill, against the bill's provision to grant redress to the estates of the deceased, largely Issei, by arguing this provision could provide redress payments to the former Japanese enemy.

In Yamada's attack on profes sor Takahashi, he attempts to argue that her statement, "It will be seen that the WRA [War Relocation Authority] and JACL collusion caused a great deal of un-rest and bitterness among the evacuees," accuses the federal government of being the enemy. For his authority, he quotes from "Webster's Third International Dictionary (Unabridged)" and forced me to make a trip to locate this dictionary. I was stunned to realize that he was confusing an example in the definition with the definition itself. The example the demnition itself. The example states, "<acting in [collusion] with the enemy>." An example is not part of the definition. An equally proper example might have been, "<the husband and wife, acting in collusion, attemped to defraud the Internal Re enne Service>." And it would not mean that the WRA and JACL were husband and wife.

Yamada also tries to belittle Takahashi's dissertation as being unpublished. Few dissertations are ever published. Takahashi's, however, happens to be an exception and continues to remain un-der consideration far publication by a publisher. Yamada even be-littles the doctoral dissertation as "an academic exercise" and recklessly cheapens the doctoral de-

Yamada's praise for the JA Creed seems to know no bounds. He writes that the creed appeared in the Congressional Record in support of redress leg-"Hence, every person who received a redress payment benefitted [sjc] from the statement of principles in the Japan-ese American Creed." The rooster's crow does cause the sun to rise, according to Yamada. Can this conflict be resolved? I think so. Both sides would first have to agree that if these state-ments by Masaoka on the suicide battalion, branding, and opposition to redress are true, then his words and name should not be included on the memorial. Once this rule is agreed upon, we can submit the allegations at issue to a panel of impartial Asian American scholars in a public hearing. The panel could listen to and question representatives of both sides and then make a ruling. I don't think Yama ada's definition of 'collusion" or his belittling of professor Takahashi's dissertation and the dissertation process need be dignified by this treatment; they should be dismissed out of hand by both sides without any further debate.

Omura's stand for them was pop-ular with JAs at the time. Many of them felt then, and still do,

Be put into Labor Concentration camps to be farmed out to large sugar beet combines as cheap laborers. 2. The Japanese internees be brought in for road making. 3. The Japanese be branded and stamped and put under the supervision of the Federal government." The question he discusses at length is what is the antecedent for "He"? Is it Mike Masaoka or someone else?

> Grammatically, it is clear that it is Mike Masaoka. Appearing at its beginning, "Mr. Mike Masao-ka" is the only name that appears in this short, 104-word para-graph. Stylistically, each of the reports recorded in this portion of the minutes begins with the name of the person giving the report and uses a pronoun to refer

He then expands the funds reach "to help boat people or other refugees from political persecution and from national calamities." Noble causes, indeed, but not redress for individ-ual JAs. Three months later in the House hearing he simply states, "We, both in the JACL and in the Nisei Lobby, oppose this particular bit of legislation."

Rebuttal to Yamada Letter of January 7, 2000 By WILLIAM HOHRI resentatives, Ninety-Sixth Con gress, Second Session on H.R. 5499, June 2, 1980. The asser-Gerald Yamada, Esq., legal counsel to the National Japanese American Memorial Foundation, in his letter to J. Carter Brown Jan. 7, 2000, lists three statements from a letter by professors Yamamoto and Iijima as allega-tions easily dismissed as untrue and as part of a specious smear campaign. He also attacks professor Rita Takahashi and her 1980 doctoral dissertation, of all things, for misconstruing the wartime role of the JACL and argues, believe it or not, that the Japanese American Creed led to redress payments to Japanese Americans for their wartime exclusion and their wartime exclusion and detention. Professors Yamamoto and Iiii ma state that Mike massaka "proposed a 'suicide battalion' of Japanese Americans," "proposed ... Japanese Americans be brand-ed," and "failed to support the first Japanese American redress egislation [introduced] in 1979. Are their statements true or easi ly dismissed as untrue?

The assertions about the "suicide battalion" are found in the "Final Report" written by Mike Masaoka on 22 April 1944, page 53; in "Nisei, the Quiet Americans." by Bill Hosokawa, Morrow cans, by Bill, Hosokawa, Morrow, New York 1969, pages 271-2; and in "They Call Me Moses Masao-ka," by Mike Masaoka and Bill Hosokawa, Morrow, New York; 1987, pages 80-1. The assertions about branding are documented in the Minutes of the Special National Council Meeting, JACL, First Session, page 15, March 8, 1942. The assertions of Masaoka's opposition to compensatory re-dress to individuals and the first redress legislation, introduced by Mike Lowry, are printed in the Hearing before the Committee or Hearing before the Committee on Governmental Affairs, United States Senate, Ninety-Sixth Con-gress, Second Session on S.1647, March 18, 1980, and the Hearing before the Subcommittee on Ad-ministrative Law and Govern-mental Relations of the Commit-tee of the Judiciary House of Eep. e of the Judiciary, House of Reptions are supported by docu-ments and cannot be dismissed as untrue Given the sources. se charges are hardly the stuff of a "specious smear campaign.

Yamada's effort to deny Masao-ka's authorship of the proposal for a "suicide battalion" is strange. Yamada seems to change his mind as he writes and affirms not only Masaoka's authorship but the proposal's benefit when he writes: "Mr. Masaoka's pro-posal was rejected initially but posal was rejected initially but later accepted by the federal government resulting in the formation of 442nd Regimental Com-bat Team." Yamada then credits bat Team." Yamada then credits Masaoka's "proposal" for making a "substantial contribution to the war effort." (He ignores the reck-less arrogance of that part of Masaoka's proposal that would have our Issei parents, without have our Issei parents, without being asked, serve as hostages to ensure the loyalty of the suicide battalion. I can almost hear, from the Great Beyond, my Issei fa-ther-in-law's loud and angry

WHA-A-A-TI" Unfortunately, the only proof Yamada offers for this is that Masaoka made the proposal about a year before the establishment of the 442nd RCT was an-nounced in 1943. This fallacious reasoning has a Latin expres sion, post hoc, ergo propter hoc, or after this, therefore because of this. Put prosaically, the argument that the rooster's crow causes the sun to rise fails to con-vince. More importantly, he ig-nores the role of the 442nd RCTs oredecessor, the men of the 100th Infantry Battalion (separate) from Hawaii who were being trained for combat before the announcement of an all-volunteer combat unit, and went into com-bat months before the 442nd joined them in Italy. Of course, neither unit has ever been con-sidered to be a suicide battalion These men were courageous and loyal, not suicidal.

didn't stop him from helping the

In his quest to piece together Finch's life, Santoki is still searching for the motivating fector for Finch's generosity. Thave many theories but that is definitely the $20,000 question why did he do what he did?"

one theory is a simple one:
that Finch desired friendship.
A second theory is that Finch was sympathetic to the underdog because despite widespread anti-Semitism in the Deep South, Finch had a Jewish child-hood friend. Add to that his wheelchair-bound mother, who may have faced discrimination due to her inability to walk.

A third theory is that Finch, a non-educated. non-religious. man who became rich rapidly due to his business interactions with the military base, may have been influenced by the philosophy of Huey Long, whose treatise "Share the Wealth" was popular at the time. In it, Long advocated that no American should horde wealth but should share it with others

This theory seems plausible to Santoki since, in his interviews with the veterans, many have with the veterans, many have told him something along the lines that: "Ey, I was a nobody. Nisei in those days, they didn't have money, they didn't have power, they were nobodies. Now, this guy takes you to New Orleans, takes you to the Oyster Bar, he buys all your drinks and then afterwards takes you home. Do you think he was thinking 20 years down the line he's going to get something out of you?" Supporting this theory is the fact that Finch died with little money. "People like to think that he was very, very wealthy, and his own brother thought Earl was very rich, but when he died, Earl didn't have that much mon-ey left," said Santoki. "But considering how much he spent, you would think he had a lot of mon-

Another theory is that Finch may have been a homosexual. "Finch publicly denied that he "Finch publicly denied that he was gay, and obviously if he came out and said, 'Yes, I'm gay,' during that period of time, therewould have been serious repercussions on him," said Santoki.

The most common answer Santoki receives when questioning the veterans about Finch's sexuality is that for all Finch has done for the Nisel, it doesn't matter whether Finch was gay or

"Tve been told that it doesn't matter," said Santoki. "For what he did for these guys in the hospital when nobody was visiting them, they don't care. It's one of the furthest things from their

Whatever Finch's sexual inclination, Santoki is on a mission to resurrect Finch's contribu-

T think an awareness of what he contributed to the Nikkei ne contributed to the Nikkei community was very much lost between generations," said San-toki. "I think the more I got into the research about the kind of contributions he made to the Nisei, in particular, when they re-ally needed assistance was that all of the hundreds, if not thousands of beneficiaries have a real obligation to make sure that Finch's contributions to them is real sense that I want to perpetuate the example that he set for people of color, the sense that your priority in life should be to help people."

To this end, Santoki is asking for the publics help. He would like anyone who knew Finch to
