Keri Nishimoto Making an Impact at Cal State Long Beach

By LYNDSEY SHINODA Writer/Reporter

She was a 13-year-old just watching a volleyball game on tele-vision, but what she saw forever changed her life. For Keri Kiyoko Nishimoto, 20, seeing the Long Beach State women's volleyball team win the national champi-onship in 1993 inspired her to at-tend the school. school records this year: most assists in one game (95), and highest average of assists (14.58 per gene).

Her training has brought her a long way, but it was her brains that got her to Long Beach. The 5°7"

Born in Redlands, Calif., on Jan. 2, 1980, Nishimoto was all but des-tined for greatness in athletics and academics. Her two older brothers. Ryan, 24 and Craig, 22, always competed with their little sister in sports, and she grew up playing baseball and soccer with them. She only started playing volleyball in school because she wanted to play three sports.

"Everyone is horrible when they some training from my club team, came out to volleyball camps at Long Beach, and got some good training there," she said. "Coming to Long Beach was my dream."

Nishimoto, the starting setter for Cal State Long Beach, helped lead the 49ers to a 14-2 record in the Big West conference and a 31-4 record overall in the 1999 season. The team was ranked No. 4 in the nation this year, and made it to the NCAA semifinals, where they fell to Stanford. Nishimoto broke two

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Percentage Plan No Substitute for Affirmative Action Programs

By MARTHA NAKAGAWA

Percentage plans — programs that allow for a certain percentage of people, regardless of race or gen-der, to be hired at a state institution or admitted to a state univer-sity — are not a viable alternative sity — are not a viable alternative to affirmative action programs, ac-cording to a study released on April 11 by the U.S. Commission on Civil by the U.S. Commission on Civ-il Rights.

"Percentage plans are experi-mental responses to the attack on affirmative action," said Cruz Reynoso, commission vice chair-man. "They are no substitute for strong race-conscious affirmative action plans."

National JACL Director John Tateishi voiced similar sentiment. "Affirmative action, as a program, was instituted because it wasn't was instituted because it wasn't equal for everyone so if you talk about a volunteer system, it's going back to the way things were before 1964, he said. 'It was a dismal fail-ure then. I don't know why it would be any better now. ...Whether it's in employment or education, I just don't think that history shows equality for everyone unless there's someone enforcing it.'

someone enforcing it."
Tateishi said JACL is closely monitoring the issue and is in the process of writing up an analysis on how the shut-down of affirmative action programs will have on equal opportunity for people of col-or. JACLs report is scheduled to come out before the national con-vention in June.

The commission report comes at a time when states such as Florida and Pennsylvania are considering voluntarily dismantling affirma-tive action programs for percentage plans similar to those adopted by California and Texas, two states that were legally forced to abandon affirmative action programs.

In California, voters passed Proposition 209 in 1996. This March, the University of California Board of Regents, in response to the dwindling number of minority students admitted to the Universistudents admitted to the University of California system's flagship institutions — UC Berkeley and UCLA — adopted a "Four Percent Plan," which would allow the top 4 percent of students from all accredited California public high schools to become eligible to attend the UC

But the commission report found that the "Four Percent Plan" does not guarantee students admission to the campus of their choice, and thus concluded that it would have minimal effect in promoting diver-sity, particularly at their flagship universities can Legal Center of Southern Calican Legal Center of Southern Cati-fornia, the Mexican American Le-gal Defense and Education Fund and the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund recently filed a federal lawsuit against UC Berke-ley for denying admission to quali-fied Pilipino Americans, African Americans and Latino students.

The mit ellowed the in compact

The suit alleged that in compar-ing an applicant's grade point aver-age of 4.0 or higher, minority stuage of 4.0 or higher, minority students were more likely to be denied admission than white students to UC Berkeley. It found that UC Berkeley admitted 48.2 percent of white applicants with GPAs of 4.0

white applicants with GPAs of 4.0 or higher, while only 31.6 percent of Plipino Americans; 38.5 percent of African Americans; and 39.7 percent of Latino applicants with similar GPAs were admitted.

In Texas, the legislature, in response to the Hopwood v. Texas court case, adopted a "10 Percent Plan," which would allow the top 10 percent of students graduating from an accredited Texas high school to become eligible to attend tate universities. state universities.

The commission found that ethnic diversity at Texas' flagship state institutions of University of Texas-Austin and Texas A&M dropped slightly in 1998, the year

John Tateishi Named JACL National Director

By MARTHA NAKAGAWA

SAN FRANCISCO-The national JACL board of directors offi-cially named John Tateishi as the organization's new national direcorganizations new national direc-tor at their quarterly meeting in San Francisco on April 14-16.

"We're proud to have John Tateishi come aboard," said Na-tional JACL President Helen Kawagoe:

Kawagoe said five candidates were interviewed for the position, were interviewed for the position, and of the five, Tateishi was one of two strong finalists selected by the interview committee. Tateishi was uanimously selected by the nationuanimously selected by the natori-al board after management skills, knowledge of JACL, advocacy and fundraising abilities were as-sessed, said Kawagoe. Evidence Suggests Secrets Downloaded by Lee Were Not Classified

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA FE, N.M.designs and related nuclear-blast simulations downloaded by a fired Los Alamos scientist were not classified as "restricted data" at the time he is accused of illegally copying them to unclassified computers and computer tapes.

According to prosecution evi-dence, most of the data Wen Ho Lee is accused of illegally mishandling was not labeled restricted, designation the U.S. Department of Energy uses to categorize nuclear de sign information.

Records show most, if not all, of Lee's tapes were full of data designated as PARD, or protect as restricted data. Un-like restricted data, PARD is not a data classification. It is a set of rules for handling data.

Lee is accused of download-ing classified information onto unsecured computers and com-puter tapes at Los Alamos Na-tional Laboratory, which has been at the center of an alleged Chinese espionage scandal. Lee is not charged with spying.

He is awaiting a Nov. 6 trial and is being held without bail because of security concerns. Lee faces life in prison if convicted of the charges over the The uncertainty classification of the data Lee is accused of mishandling could affect the prosecution's case against the 60-year-old scien-tist, said Steve Aftergood, a classification expert at the Federation of American Scien-

This is an indication of potentially lesser sensitivity," said Aftergood, whose Wash-ington, D.C.-based organization was founded by former Los Alamos weapons scien-tists. It raises one more small question about the prosecution of this case."

The PARD designation was devised by the defunct Atomic Energy Commission so scienwould not have to classify and lock up reams of printouts the early decades weapons computing.

Under Energy Department guidelines, PARD information is to be handled as if it were classified as restricted data. But Los Alamos assigned PARD a lower level of computer security than restricted data at the time Lee allegedly downloaded the secrets.

Federal prosecutors argue that the more than 20 weapons designs and related nuclearsimulations Lee is accused of mishandling were extremely sensitive - the crown jewels" of U.S. national defense.

Lee's attorneys contend the downloaded bomb secrets were not that 'secret and that Lee had legitimate reasons for copying them.

Neither side would comment on whether the PARD designation will play a role at trial.

"An argument can be made both ways, but the PARD designation is one step further removed from the 'crown jewels category." said Aftergood.

Ray Holmer, director of operations for the DOE's Office of Cybersecurity and former DOE manager of classified computer security, said all data on the Los Alamos classified network are automatically viewed as secret restricted

In the late 1950s, weapons scientists had no desktop computers but designed nuclear bombs on large mainframe computers using punch cards.

The cards, code listings and printed outputs sometimes contained weapons secrets.

But the printouts were too voluminous to treat as secret and lock in office safes, said Bob Clark, a computational physicist who worked on weapons codes at LANL until

It was useless to handle all this stuff as secret because there was too much of it," he said. PARD was a way to cir-cumvent some laws we thought were too restrictive, to get some work done."

In time electronic data storage made punch cards and printouts obsolete and the lab expanded PARD to include electronic data files.

"The intent was for hard copy," he said. "Over time, some people migrated it inappropriately to magnetic me-

Still, under DOE rules, all data on a classified network should be considered classified until formally declassified, in-cluding the PARD downloaded by Lee, Holmer said.

We know it's classified because it came out of a classi-fied computer," he said. "It's classified until it's undergone a classification review to prove it's not classified." ■

President Clinton Signs Bill to Name Los Angeles Post Office After Hate Crime Victim Joseph Ileto

President Clinton signed a bill on April 14 naming a Chino Hills post office after slain Filipino American postal worker, Joseph

The alleged gunman is an acknowledged white supremacist, and has been charged with hate crimes and other federal vi-olations involving Ileto's shooting death and the shooting injuries of five people at the North Valley Jewish Community Center.

The defendant allegedly admitted to targeting Ileto because he was not white and because he was wearing a federal uniform.

Ismael Ileto, brother of Joseph Ileto, said, "We are very pleased that Joseph Ileto will be remembered for generations to come by naming the Chino Hills Post Of fice after him. According to retired Monterey Peninsula College professor and author David Yamada in his book
'The Japanese of the Monterey Peninsula,' these words to Royal Louis Manaka from his father would leave a lasting impression on him for the rest of his life.

Manaka was working as a fish-erman when he was inducted into the U.S. Army in November of 1941. While undergoing basic training in field artillery at Camp Roberts near San Luis Obispo, Calif., news arrived of Japan's at-tack on Pearl Harbor. After that, Manaka's family was forced to lock up their home and leave for Delano, Calif., on their way to the Poston, Ariz., internment camp

"Not only did Royal make the Fort Riley team, he trained with Joe Louis, the reigning heavy-weight boxing champion of the world," said Yamada. "The all-black military unit was also training at Fort Riley. ment."

Manake was sent to Camp Shelby, Miss., for basic training and eventually served as the first sergeant of the Service Company of the 442nd RCT. In 1944, his company served in Bruyeres, France, and saved what is known today as the "Lost Texas Battalion." The cost was extremely high however as out of 450 men sent to rescue the Lost Texas Battalion, only 35 to 40 survived.

Memorial Foundation Seeks Public's Help to Assure Accuracy of Military List

Major Gen. James H. Mükoyama Jr., USAR (Ret.) appealed to the Japanese American community to assist in the process to ensure the accuracy of the list of over 800 names of military personnel who died in service during World War II to be inscribed on the Japanese American National Memorial to Patriotism in Washington, D.C.

Mukoyama has completed the review of the honor roll and has posted the list on the foundation. We be gite at www.niamf.org. The honor roll includes the names of individuals who died during WWII while a member of the U.S. armed forces. Persons listed must be of sapanese descent or must have served in one of the JA segregated units, including the Military Intelligence Service. The honor roll is a collation of

The honor roll is a collation of three major documents: the 442nd Archives and Learning Center List from Hawaii, the official 1946 War Department Honor Roll List, and the Americans of Japanese Ancestry World War II Memorial Alliance List.

Because of his military background and his commitment to the memorial, Mukoyama volunteered to head this effort and worked for over two years to make it as complete as possible. NJAMF board director and WWII veteranlikelly Kuwayama assisted the effort by going to the National Archives and obtaining one of the key documents, the War Department 1946 Honor Roll list from numerous states and the Pacific territories. James Yamashita from the AJA World War II Memorial Alliance in Lo Angeles also played an important role in cross checking the list of names.

As a final check of the list, Mukoyama made corrections, additions, and deletions based on numerous e-mails and correspondence from the public in response to the foundations Web site listing, which has been posted since late 1998. In order to evaluate a name for listing, numerous pieces of information were considered: family name, first name, middle initial, rank, serial number, unit, date of death, place of death, and place of burial.

If sufficient data was not available to justify listing, the name was placed in an unconfirmed list for possible future listing if the additional information becomes available. As of this date, the confirmed list contains a total of $10 names.

Anyone wishing to register a correction or submit additional information, please fax to the foundation at 202/861-8845 or email to njamf@erols.com.

UCLA Announces Summer Program on Hawaii's AP! Communities

The UCLA Asian American Studies Center, in conjunction with the American Studies Department of the University of Hawaii, Manoa, will once again offer its Multicultural Summer Program in Honolulu for graduate, undergraduate, and high school students.

The award-winning program, which was inaugurated nearly a decade ago, provides an intensive, six-week immersion in Asian American and Pacific Islander communities in Hawaii through a multidisciplinary survey of their histories, cultures, and community issues.

Miyamura, who spent more than two years as a prisoner of war, was cited for his heroic action on the rainy night of April 24, 1951, near Taejon-ni. A member of H Company, Third Division, which had been ordered to withdraw in the face of a fierce enemy offensive which had cracked the United Nations line, Miyamura was positioned between a light and a heavy machine gun position. Hurling grenades and emptying his carbine, he aided two wounded Gis in the four-man, heavy-machinegun position. Instructing them to cover him, he clamped his bayonet on his carbine and left the emplacement.

"...Wielding his bayonet in close, hand-to-hand combat, he killed approximately 10 of the enemy," his citation reads. Miyamura ran back up to the machine gun position and ordered the gunners and wounded riflemen to fall back while he covered them. "As another savage assault hit the line, he manned the machine gun and delivered withering fire until his ammunition was expended," the citation contin-

Miyamura prepared to withdraw, first destroying the machine gun. Running down the trench, he collided into a Chinese soldier. Both recoiled, but Miyamura was quicker. He shot and wounded his adversary, who threw a grenade in Miyamura's direction. Miyamura kicked it back, but got wounded in his leg.

He ran desperately toward an American tank staked to cover the withdrawal, but was caught in barbed wire. He managed to free himself and dropped into a

I know you're alive. We don't harm prisoners." Four days later, when a Third Division Task Force slashed its way back to the position last occupied by Miyamura, they found more than 50 enemy dead lying scattered on both sides of the slope. Miyamura's citation, dated Miyamura's citation, dated Dec. 21, 1951, was kept a classified top secret for 19 months until his release for fear that the enemy would learn of Sgt. Miyamura's "kills" and take revenge. When the POWs were returned to Freedom village after the armistice in late July 1953, an astonished Miyamura learned that he had received the nation's top miliary honor. He was formally presented the medal in White House ceremonies on October 27, 1953, by President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Miyamura operated a service station in Gallup, N.M., after the war until he retired in 1984. He sent his three children to college and enjoys visiting his grandchildren and fishing. A member of the Gallup Lions Club, he often state of the men and women who served when duty called, some of whom never came back. As a member of the elite medal of Honor Society, he has been invited to presidential inaugurations many times, and he also attends reunions and conventions of veterans whenever he can.

We are lawyers, scientists, educators, entrepreneurs, police officers, students, and activists. We crossed generational lines and crossed generational lines and ranged in age from the 20s to the 60s. And with a little time to digest it all, several themes from the sessions resonated with me.

an, several thenes from the sessions resonated with me.

The conference was about camaraderie. Peppered with much laughter, humor and head-nodding, we developed strong bonds over the four days. We were united by shared concerns about issues affecting the APA community and commonality of experience. We shared in gratitude to OCA Executive Director Daphne Kwok and her staff, and JACI. Washington, DC. Representative Kristine Minami, for their efforts in arranging such an impressive agenda.

The conference was about learning. The off-the-record sessions and candid exchanges increased my un-did exchanges increased my un standing of national issues candid exchanges increased my un-derstanding of national issues, such as the pervasiveness of racial profiling, efforts to pass stronger hate crimes legislation, the Wen Ho. Lee case's impact on the APA community, and the White House Initiative on Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders. I also gained a better, appreciation of my. OCA counterparts' unique heritage and the prejudice and discrimination that they, too experienced as im-migrants.

the prejudice and discrimination that they, too experienced as immigrants.

The conference was about inspiration. Interacting with APA role models and mentors was both eye-opening and humbling. I was awed by their willingness to give up a beautiful Saturday afternoon, to speak to us, join us at a rainy Sunday night dinner, or rise st dawn. I was touched by their enthusiastic commitment to the conference, to the community and to us. I was also massed at the different paths speakers took to achieve what they have, bit it was obvious that determination, hard work, and commitment were keys to their success.

'Among those APA leaders were Sens. Daniel Inouye and Daniel Akaka; Congressmen Robert Matsui and Bob Underwood; former Congressman Norman Mineta; and many others.

The conference was also about empowerment and commitment. I left with a renewed sense of purpose and a commitment to myself to stay active in myself pose and a commitment to myseit to stay active in my community. The speakers' experiences confirmed for me that we can make a difference by developing a firm set of ideals, principles, and beliefs to ground us, by building effective coalitions and networks, and by coalitions and networks, and by taking risks. Empowerment is also about confronting stereotypes and moving beyond our respective com-fort zones. As one speaker so elo-quently reminded us, we owe something to our communities, we need to broaden our horizons, take pride in our ancestry, and partici-pate actively in our minority and pate actively in our minority and majority communities. In short, for me, the four days were about being motivated to fol-low in the footsteps of those APAs who have already contributed so much and to forge new paths for ourselves and our communities.

Being a gardener's daughter myself, I knew of their contributions intuitively. Yet now editing and compiling a book on the history of JA gardeners in Southern California, I have come across a wealth of information that has confirmed my suspicious gardenweath of mormation that has confirmed my suspicions: garden-ers, at least within the big cities of California, Oregon, Washington and even Canada, have been the backbone of our ethnic communi-

Gardeners, in general, are a tough breed with an independent spirit but also have the propensity to organize. Japanese immi-grants first entered the profession in the early 1900s, when Italians apparently dominated the market. At that time, instead of pickup trucks and vans, gardeners rode on bicycles, their tools carefully attached or pulled along. Just like today, many along. Just like today, many worked six or seven days a week. On New Year's Day, academicians tell us, they wore suits with tails as they traveled their routes.

By the 1920s and '30s, Issei and Nisei had already organized and Nise had already organized multiple social, economic and political organizations, including the JACL, and the gardeners were no exception. In terms of Southern California, an association of gardeners had formed in Riverside, and later a larger one interests.

training ground for new garden-ers. As men, many of them bach-elors, entered the boarding house, older ones essentially taught them the ins-and-outs of garden maintenance. Used vehicles and maintenance. Used vehicles and equipment were sometimes passed from one gardener to another, while the boarding house was also the place to pick up helpers. Most of these helpers inevitably went on to assume their own routes.

After the war, gardening be-came the sure-fire way for Issei, Kibei and Nisei to work and re-build their lives and the greater JA community. Among those in the same profession were decorat ed 442nd veterans, no-no boys, and even those who had "repatri-ated" to Japan and returned to the United States They included those who had graduated from UCLA, attended Meiji University in Tokyo, or perhaps never pro-gressed beyond a high school edu-cation. Many could not speak English well and needed a profession with no language fluency requirements.

And, of course, the jobs were also available to them. It was the postwar boom, and new homes were being constructed every where. New homes needed land scaping and lawn mainten JA gardeners had had a good rep-utation before the war, which car-ried them through the 1950s and maybe even today. For the main stream culture, JAs fit the stereo-type of having a special under-standing of nature. In reality, it was a drive to survive economically in a discriminatory society that pushed these men and some women to enter the profession by the thousands.

Labor issues eventually led to the creation of the Southern California Gardeners' Federation and others like them all along the West Coast. Established unions were using extreme measures to force gardeners to join their ranks. These tactics backfired, and the JA gardeners rallied to and the JA gardeners rained to create their own professional as-sociations, which eventually pro-vided education, mutual aid, in-surance and political clout.

With money they earned from hakujin and other non-Japanese customers, these gardeners invested in the JA community. Not only did they use local banks and shopped in Japantowns, they also helped to build credit unions, Japanese schools, and communi-ty centers. Most of all, they inested in their children's education. By sacrificing material pos-sessions and luxuries, they were preparing for the future.

As the term "entrepreneur" is the catch phrase of this high-tech era, I must give credit to our com-munity's ultimate independent businessman. With only a lawnmower, edger and some hand tools, the gardener could only rely on his inner determination and physical effort to ensure a bright future for himself and his family. Let me be the first to tell you, job well done.

Japanese American Memorial Needs to Correct Errors

On March 21-2000, John G. Parsons of the National Park Service (NPS) issued a letter approving the proposed inscriptions for the Japanese American national memorial in Washington D.C. Despite his knowledge that errors remain in the text, he signed off and gave his stamp of approval. ©

Many persons wrote to Mr.
Parsons, advising him of the errors and calling attention to in-scription-problems because historical accuracy is the NPS's re-sponsibility. Unfortunately, despite repeated contacts and com-munications to both the NPS and the National Japanese American Memorial Foundation's (NJAMF) board chairman and executive director, many errors were not corrected.

Among the errors and prob lems remaining on the memorial · Inaccurate names or types attributed to the camps (e.g., in-correctly calling Crystal City an orrectly camp.

• Distortion of facts: The presently worded text is misleading. It does not clearly state that 10,000 men who volunteered to serve in the U.S. Army's 442nd Perimental Combet Them due. Regimental Combat Team during WWII were from Hawaii. The conscripts who formed the 100th Infantry Battalion were also from Hawaii.

Misquote of quotation; changed wording in so-called quotation.

• Omission of content, such as leaving out names of important camps (e.g., Santa Fe Internment Camp), ignoring experiences outside of incarceration, and demonstrating gender inequality.

• Inclusion of a quotation by a controversial private individual, which served to splinter rather than unify the community.

A small group of NJAMF board members have been clamoring for historical accuracy and de manding that changes be made Despite repeated and ongoing attempts to make these and other changes, those with the authority to make changes and responsibil-ity to ensure accuracy failed to follow through.

Looking at this issue from the surface, one might wonder why this small group of board members cannot accept the will of the "majority" and just go along. The reason is that this group firmly believes it is wrong to ignore these problems when each of us otice that they exist. It is also wrong to ignore improper and unfair procedures and processes that were used in care-fully controlled decision-making ivers. By no means can or say that the processes were fair, just, and equitable. What infor-mation was given to the board, when, and by whom were careful-ly orchestrated. Many very im-portant decisions were made by administrative fiat.

To level the playing field and to bring the debate into a more im-partial, objective, and unbiased arena, some board members considered filing a lawsuit. This action was proposed to rectify prob-lem areas and to promote accuraosed to rectify probcy and inclusiveness, certainly not to obstruct or delay construction. It is this group's desire to see construction continues schedule, and to ensure that changes be made for historical accuracy, appropriateness, and inclusiveness. All our past and fu-ture actions are singularly aimed toward this goal.

My question is: Does that mean all Japanese, Chinese, nonAmericans are "bad" people and we need to differentiate us from them in order to be accepted in this country? How about respecting all people?

The commission report supports Tateishi's assessment. In Florida, Tateishi's assessment. In addition, the report noted that public schools in 25 Florida counties did not offer Advanced Placement (AP) courses, thereby placing students from low-per forming, minority-dominated schools at a disadvantage. These students, because of inadequate curriculum offerings, may be missing up to 19 precollege credits required by the state university

The commission report conclud-ed that the One Florida Plan failed to address the state's deteriorating K-12 educational system, orating K-12 educational system, made no provisions for "students who were qualified for (state uni-versity) admission but who are not in the top 20 percent of their class and completely ignored ensuring diversity at the graduate school

Similar disparities in educational opportunities were found in California and Taylor

Bút Bush, a Republican, publicy dismissed the Democrat-dominated commission report as a political move. Jeb Bush is the brother of George Bush, Jr., who is the governor of Texas and the leading candidate for the GOP's presidential nomination.

Bush sent a letter to Mary Frances Berry, chair of the com-mission, saying that he was "deeply troubled that the Commission-would take a formal, official position against my Initiative without even seeking to contact any member of my administra-

Bush further noted that "It is hard to discern a non-political rea-son for such a hasty rush to judge-ment, or for the Commission to attack a positive plan like One Flori-

The partisan rift was evident in the commission report which in-cluded dissenting statements from the two Republican members of the eight-member commission. Ir it, Commissioners Carl A. Ander son and Russell G. Redenbaugh referred to the report as "littered inaccuracies and halfwith

But Berry, commission chair, denied any political motivation.
"The commission decided by a vote of 6-2 that public discussion of percentage plans in higher edu-cation and inquiries concerning the commission's position had reached a level that an immediate analysis of the data generated in states that have already adopted such plans would serve the public interest," said Berry. "...Whether one believes in the use of gender and race-conscious s such as affirmative action or not, it is important to understand the role percentage plans play in achieving higher ed-ucation opportunity for all Ameri-

The report concluded that per centage plans were "good public relations strategy" but failed to promote diversity. The commis-sion urged President Clinton and sion urged President Clinton and his administration to ensure percentage plans did not violate Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

"It's a tough political issue but the tough political issue should not remove the national government from their role in making care, that states shide his to be followed.

ment from their role in making sure that states abide by the fed-eral civil rights law," said Reynoso. Added Tateishi, "If this comes up legislatively, we'll take a real close look at it."

a book, Nishimoto loves to spend time with her family. Her father, Mark, is a Sansei and her moth er, Leslye, is English and Swedish Both work as tax preparers and Mark also teaches math in high schools. Her oldest brother, Ryan, graduated from Pepperdine University with a bachelor degree in math, and is a high school teacher. Her brothraig is going to bible college, and she sees him winding up in missionary work.

Nishimoto considers her mother to be her role model in everything. "I grew up learning from her. She's got to be the greatest mom ever," she said

Another large part of her life is her religion. A devoted Christian. Nishimoto lists her favorite book as the Bible, and regularly attends bible studies at church. She has travelled to Hungary, Slovakia and Poland on short term missions. While most peo-ple her age long to visit places like the Bahamas or Europe, this humble person plans to do

"Td like to see a third world country like Uganda or Sudan," she said. "It would open my eyes to the world."

This summer, Nishimoto is keeping busy as usual. In the first part of the summer, she has to have shoulder surgery and will have to deal with the rehabilitation that comes along with

Once healed, she hopes to play a lot of beach volleyball as well as club volleyball to gear up for the fall season. She also plans to coach kids at volleyball

"Td like to be a role model be cause kids are always looking for someone to look up to," she

Nishimoto admits to having a competitive streak and approaches everything with extreme intensity.
"After a week away from the court, I need to get back out there," she said. "I love the competition and being able to play at a higher level."

Nishimoto is currently finish-ing her third year of college at Long Beach and hopes to graduate in another year or so.

She isn't in a hurry though.

With at least two more years of athletic eligibility left, no one is in a hurry to see her go .
