P.C. EDITOR EMERITUS HARRY HONDA IS A ‘LIVING LEGEND’
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE ‘POWER OF WORDS’ HAS MANY MEANINGS

In your Aug. 17-Sept. 6, 2012, issue, it was quite interesting to read the articles that used the abbreviation POW to stand for “Power of Words.” Previously, the abbreviation POW had only meant “Prisoner of War” to me, and the articles thus reminded me of the impact of FDR’s order a few years ago.

In 1946, I served in the U.S. Army with a Nisei sergeant in Kumamoto, Japan. When he mentioned that he had been a POW, I expressed surprise because I didn’t know he had served overseas during the war. I asked where he had been a POW, and his reply was, “Tule Lake.” I do appreciate and enjoy having the opportunity to read the Pacific Citizen.

IT’S IMPORTANT FOR JAPANESE AMERICANS TO STAY POLITICALLY ACTIVE

As a child growing up in the East Bay, I recall my mother was always involved with voter registration and she served as a poll worker for elections. I think she was inspired by her interest in politics (she received her B.A. from U.C. Berkeley in political science before being shipped off to a relocation camp). Going through her papers recently, I found she was also a League of Women Voters member.

The Nisei experience during World War II gave political involvement an urgency for that generation. Voting and political awareness is no less important today. A member of the non-partisan League of Women Voters myself, I am hoping the Japanese American community stays politically active. A basic but very important step is to register to vote. Everyone can register online by going to the California Secretary of State website (http://www.sos.ca.gov/). The League of Women Voters is also holding voter registration days around the Bay Area. Please, the right to vote was hard fought. Please register to vote and stay involved.

THE INTERNMENT EXPERIENCE SHOULD CONTINUE TO BE TAUGHT AND REMEMBERED

One wrote in a recent issue of Pacific Citizen that Japanese Americans and non-JAs need to know more and more of the internment experience. Well, when my aunt passed in March, I learned that a couple of days after Pearl Harbor was bombed, my own grandfather was taken away to Chicago. This is a piece of history that affected the JAs during WWII. My aunt told my cousin that after Pearl Harbor was bombed, my grandfather was taken away to Chicago. This is a piece of history that affected the JAs during WWII. My aunt told my cousin that she herself was a child at the time, and she was taken to Chicago.

Knowledge is endless. So, information such as these should be written in the Pacific Citizen. No matter how you look at it, it is something we need to learn, know and be aware of. It will always be a part of us until death. Before my aunt passed, she had to tell me about her childhood experience in Chicago. It’s important to know that it will always be a part of us until death. Before my aunt passed, she had to tell me about her childhood experience in Chicago. It’s important to know that it will always be a part of us until death.

Pacific Citizen and staff, continue writing about the internment camps!

FOUR NECESSARY DOCUMENTS ASSOCIATED WITH EXECUTIVE ORDER 9066

There were seven sequential documents that led to the removal of Japanese Americans to assembly centers or relocation camps. Each document was required before the evacuation could take place.

1. Executive Order 9066, February 19, 1942. Authorizing the secretary of war to prescribe military areas.
2. Executive Order 9102, March 9, 1942. Authorizing the creation of War Relocation Authority (WRA).
3. Public Law 503 (77th Congress); March 21, 1942. Authorizing the military to order removal from military zones.
4. Civilian Exclusion Orders No. 1-68 (?), Headquarter Western Defense Command and Fourth Army Presidio of San Francisco; May 7, 1942. J. L. De Witt; Lt. Gen. U.S. Army commanding. (Note: Each geographic area had its own C.E. Order No. For example, Placer County had CE Order No. 9 and 48, which designated geographic areas to be evacuated.)
5. Exclusion Order No., this headquarters dated May 7, 1942, all persons of Japanese ancestry, both alien and non-alien, will be evacuated from the above area by 12 o'clock noon, PWT, Thursday, May 14, 1942.

Because of the generality (or lack of knowledge), usually E.O. 9066 is mentioned as the order to evacuate. But the four documents were required before evacuation could take place.

TRUE BLUE DEMS

By John Tateishi

It seems a rather odd thing that a vast majority of Nisei have always been Democrats when you consider that the president who authorized the policies that led to the incarceration and imprisonment of Japanese Americans during World War II was a Democrat; and that he caved is to a Democrat-controlled Congress that demanded the permanent removal of the Japanese population from the West Coast.

If ever there was a clear reason for the Nisei to abandon the Democratic Party to become Republicans, WWII definitely was it. In fact, one would have thought the government's treatment of JAs during the war would have made an abandonment of the Democratic Party by the Nisei a moral imperative. The Nisei were betrayed and abandoned by their own government, and the government in those times was run by Democrats.

Oddly enough, however, only rarely did that ever happen. It's interesting that such a broad majority of Nisei remained Democrats.

In speaking before non-JA audiences as JACL's national redress director or during my years as its national director, I was asked now and then why I'm a Democrat when so much of the misery exacted upon JAs during the war was at the hands of Democrats. Well, it's pretty obvious that if our Nisei parents were Democrats, we Sansei would most likely follow suit. Children assume the values of their parents, and given that political values are an extension of social values, they are very strongly inculcated from one generation to the next. I knew that was true in my family.

During the redress campaign, I sometimes used to ask JA audiences by show of hands how many were Democrats and how many were Republicans, and with consistency only a few said they were Republicans. I suppose if one were to argue that life's events impact how one views political parties, logic would tell you that Japanese Americans, especially the Nisei, should have been mostly Republicans.

But they weren't. Not by a long shot.

The Nisei were strongly rooted in the values of the Democratic Party, regardless of all the humiliating and unfair treatment they had to endure because of the racist attitudes of a Democratic president and a Democrat-controlled Congress.

But what the Republican Party represented wasn't what the Nisei believed in. I'm not talking about the current Republican Party that has been hijacked by the demagoguery of the extreme right-wing and wing nut Tea Partiers, but the party that at one time represented a reasonable alternative to what Democrats stood for.

Because the Nisei were driven by their values and their values came from a cultural construct in which the individual interest did not rise above the group, and because political values arise from personal concerns, they aligned more comfortably with Democrats. Rather than look inward to themselves individually, their consciousness was outside of themselves, their concern was for the whole, for the group, and just as -- as Japanese, as Japanese Americans -- they had learned to be concerned for others' comfort and well-being, they naturally migrated to Democratic values. They were concerned with the welfare of those who couldn't care for themselves and the government's obligation to broaden its net of caring.

They believed is devoting a deeper part of themselves to the community's well-being before their own.

What the Nisei believed so strongly about is our fight for redress typified that generation: They said constantly and believed that our struggle was not for our own benefit but for the betterment of the nation. They knew that Japanese Americans would never again experience what they did during WWII but devoted themselves to a campaign that would ensure that no other group would similarly be victimized in the future. That was one of the things that made that campaign so remarkable.

Obviously, not all Nisei were Democrats and not all Nisei were so generous in their concern for others; but it is a generation that believed and still believes so strongly in the best ideals of America.

I've never found it ironic or strange that the Nisei stayed with the political party that screwed them so badly during the war. If there were a better alternative, I suppose they would have switched. But there wasn't, and there certainly isn't one now.

NIKKEI VOICE

JAPANESE AMERICANS SHOULD FOLLOW JAPAN NEWS

By Gil Asakawa

I've been surprised that so many Japanese Americans aren't interested in Japan or even visiting Japan, mostly because they're either embarrassed that they don't speak Japanese or they feel entirely American.

I think it's more important than ever for Japanese Americans to follow events in Japan. The fact is, Japan is on the precipice of some potentially teachable political turmoil. Most Americans are unaware of Japan's dysfunctional democracy, which has led to seven prime ministers in the past decade. The government has been unable to jump-start a stalled economy, and there are a lot of disgruntled people, not just in the northeast who are still recovering from the earthquake and tsunami of 2011 but throughout the country.

And like the United States, where the economic downturn has spurred the rise of some ugly, even racist, political and social movements like the one that keeps promoting the anti-Obama "birther" theory and cloaking it in the veil of patriotism, national pride in Japan is wearing its ugly head.

The nationalist mayor of Tokyo has sparked a war of words between China and Japan by threatening to buy a cluster of islands in the Sea of Japan that have been contested ever since World War II by Japan and China.

The Japanese call the islands "Senkaku," while the Chinese call them "Disways." Prime Minister Yoshihiko Noda's government bought the islands last month from their private Japanese owners to keep the Tokyo mayor from using them to gin up nationalist fervor. But the two countries are still pushing the limits of diplomacy with military maneuvers involving the presence of warships in the area around the islands.

Meanwhile, the issue of pre-war and wartime Japan's treatment of people in countries it invaded more than half a century ago still haunts much of the region's relationships.

The mayor of Osaka, a young politician who formed a new national political party that aims to restructure the government like an East Asian version of the Tea Party, has irritated Koreans by demanding proof that Japan forced Korean women to be "comfort women" to service Japanese soldiers during WWII. Meanwhile, Korean Americans have placed monuments across the U.S. memorializing the comfort women, and the Japanese government has unfortunately tried to have them removed.

And many in China are still so furious over wartime atrocities that the recent flap over the islands sparked violent protests in China, and Japanese corporations such as Toyota have temporarily ceased production there.

Because the economies of Asia are now so intertwined, and all these countries depend on trade with each other, tensions may not end in war. But we should be paying attention to what's going on in Japan — and voicing our opinion on issues such as wartime atrocities. We should also stand up for Japan if we feel that anger aimed at the country by its neighbors is unfair.

And oh yeah, visit the country, for crying out loud — it's a wonderful place to get in touch with our roots!

JACL Mourns the Passing of Rep. Mervyn Dymally

San Francisco — JACL is mourning the passing of former California lawmaker Rep. Mervyn Dymally. Dymally, who passed away in Los Angeles on Oct. 7, 2012, at the age of 86, was known for being a strong supporter of redress for Japanese Americans when the movement for reparations was underway in the 1980s.

His political career began in the California Assembly in 1962, and Dymally was the first African American to be elected a senator in the Golden State. He also served as lieutenant governor and held the distinction of being the first and only African American to hold that position. Dymally was later elected to the U.S. Congress where he represented the city of Gardena, which is heavily populated by Japanese Americans.

It was during this time that Dymally made a visit to the Manzanar concentration camp in California. There he learned more about the redress movement, and he soon became an important advocate. He held numerous meetings with Japanese Americans and testified at congressional hearings in support of the redress bill. Dymally also secured the support of the Congressional Black Caucus for redress legislation, and devoted time to lobbying for its passage.

"We are saddened by the passing of Rep. Mervyn Dymally," said Priscilla Ouchida, national director of JACL, "whose life exemplified breaking down racial barriers in society, which barred full participation by all Americans, and who was an advocate and partner of the Japanese American community at a time when a respected voice like his was needed to advance the cause of justice."

"Our community has lost a friend and our nation has lost a hero whose life was dedicated to public service and the principles of civil rights and equality," Dymally's daughter, Lynn, said Priscilla Ouchida, national director of JACL, "because it is largely due to his efforts and dedication that we have made significant progress towards achieving a world where all people are treated with fairness and respect regardless of their race or ethnicity."

JACL Provides Testimony for Senate Hearing on Hate Crimes

The hearing was spurred, in part, by the recent tragedy in Oak Creek, Wis., where a gunman with ties to a white supremacist organization killed six people at the Sikh Temple of Wisconsin. The hearing, chaired by Sen. Richard Durbin (D-Ill.), examined the impact of a recent spike of hate crimes and the implementation of the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act.

JACL's testimony covered a range of issues related to hate crimes and manners in which extremism has affected the Asian American community. The testimony chronicled historic examples such as the Chinese Massacre of 1871 in Los Angeles, where a mob of more than 500 men stormed Chinatown and attacked, shot and lynched innocent Chinese residents. The testimony also described a 1999 shooting spree where Benjamin Smith, a member of the known hate group World Church of the Creator, killed Won-Joon Yoon, a Korean graduate student, after first killing an African American and raping at Orthodox Jews as they were returning from Sabbath services on Chicago's northside.

"This hearing is important," said Priscilla Ouchida, JACL national director, "because it addresses the persistent problem of hate crimes that continue to plague Asian American and other identifiable and vulnerable communities." Ouchida further stated that JACL will continue to monitor and respond to hate violence because it is an important component of the organization's mission.

In its testimony, JACL offered wide-ranging recommendations that address both reporting of hate crimes. The need to improve police training to include cultural competence, that colleges and universities adopt clear procedures for responding to hate crimes and hate incidents.

Finally, in its recommendations, JACL said, "Elected public officials and political leaders should refrain from activities and comments that cause or promote racial, religious or ethnic bias. Anti-Islamic comments and China-bashing are especially volatile areas for demagoguery in the current political climate. Elected public officials have an obligation to renounce the use of scapegoating of all vulnerable communities."
confirmed group tours to Japan had been called off. The Chinese state-run news agency Xinhua reported that more than a hundred thousand Chinese canceled Japan trips, and the number of tour groups to Japan had plunged by 40 percent.

China, with its growing middle class, had been one of the emerging markets that Chinese companies were counting on to boost sales amid a long stagnation in their domestic market. Japan’s trade with China reached record levels over the past 12 months, totaling more than $340 billion. China is Japan’s biggest export market.

Although the immediate damage is being felt in Japan, the soaring tensions and the realization of the so-called “China risk” are likely to crimp investments from Japan, hurting the Chinese economy as well. Japan’s exports to China in the first half of the program, participants divided up into three groups to create a final project of their choice. One group produced a documentary on Sada Sagara and the history of the Aces baseball team. Another group created a timely and educational film on the meaning and value of Obon as a contemporary Japanese American festival. The last group crafted a three-panel documentary exposing the hidden and untold history of Japanese Americans living in the San Fernando Valley.

It was inspiring to see several generations identifying common ground and working together on self-selected projects, being creative, poetic and passionate. There was no stopping us except the clock! The Katarou Histories Program was sponsored by AT&T, SFV JACL and the SFVJACC.
LIVING LEGENDS

JACL PSWDC honors chapter stalwarts at a gala awards dinner in Los Angeles.

By George Toshio Johnston

Asterisk-bound Helen Kawagoe, 84, and a still-ambassador Harry Honda, 93, were two main “living legends” and honorees among many feted at the 18th annual JACL Pacific Southwest District Council’s awards dinner.

Held at the Center Cathedral Plaza in downtown Los Angeles on Oct. 6, the event drew 225, according to PSWDC Recording Secretary Gary Mayeda, who also helped produce the event.

Kawagoe, who had a disabling stroke in September 2011, was accompanied by her daughter, Sheryl Miyamoto, who spoke on her mother’s behalf. Among her many accomplishments, Kawagoe served as JACL’s national president — the first woman to hold that position in the organization’s history — and city clerk of Carson, Calif., for 37 years.

Displaying the fighting spirit that no doubt propelled her many deeds through the years, Kawagoe spoke briefly from her wheelchair to the delight of the assembled audience. During the dinner, a petition made its way through the tables in support of having Carson’s city council chambers named for Kawagoe in honor of her decades-long service. (The motion has been opposed by some, who believe that such recognition should be made only after an honoree is deceased.)

Honda, a Los Angeles native who grew up in the Bunker Hill area located just blocks from the site of the event, received his accolades for his more than five-decade association with the Pacific Citizen newspaper in roles ranging from editor to general manager to editor emeritus.

In his brief remarks, Honda acknowledged two former P.C. colleagues in the audience and then proceeded to read an excerpt from an intricate, framed scroll of appreciation that was presented to him in 1966 at the Disneyland Hotel. “Some of the old-timers may have a similar scroll that was handcrafted, written by (postwar) national director Maso Satow,” Honda said.

“Maso Satow used to make these scrolls after he’d finish work at his desk. Since it had so many colors, it’d take forever for each color to dry and then he’d go back to printing up the rest of the scroll.”

The evening’s keynote speech was delivered by JACL National Director Priscilla Ouchida, who arrived in Los Angeles from Dallas where she had attended another event.

In what was billed as her first official event in the Los Angeles area as national director, Ouchida used “transformation” as the theme of her speech. “We’re going to be changing in the next two or three years. I’m going to be looking to you for a lot of ideas,” she said.

The PSWDC also honored several of its chapter stalwarts for their efforts. They were Melinda Inaba, (Ventura), Kerry Kanouchi (Ventura), Jefferson Kumamoto (Ventura), Mitsu Kusaka (San Fernando Valley), the late Ed Murano (South Bay), Nancy Okubo (SELANCO), Kaji Sahara (Greater L.A. Singles), Melinda Tsuguchi (Amostra) and Jean Ushijima (West L.A.). Recognized as a community honoree was Union Bank. Its award was accepted by George Tanaka, senior vp of retail specialized markets. Tanaka shared with the audience that he and his family have become active JACL members Tanaka’s daughter worked on the Clara Lee Okubo summer camp, which was run by the SELANCO chapter.

“We’re proud of the long-standing relationship between Union Bank and the PSW-MCL and all its chapters,” Tanaka said.

A Supreme Governor’s Award was presented by Editor Emeritus Kenhom to Mayeda as thanks for taking the helm in producing the evening’s event when, according to Inouye, “… we had a change in the chair of the dinner.” Serving as the evening’s master of ceremonies were Linda Hara and Doug Uma.
Harry Honda Shares Wisdom With New P.C. Staffers

Asked what advice he could lend to Pacific Citizen’s new staffers from his five-decade association with the newspaper and JACL, Harry Honda said: “They should start reading some of the past history of JACL that’s already in books.”

Then Honda was intercepted by the Japanese American Historical Society of Southern California’s Iku Kiriyama, who called him “a wonderful man” and credited him for giving a name to her group’s publication, “Nanka Nikkei Voices.”

Continuing, Honda added, “Bill Hosokawa wrote a book called ‘JACL: In Quest of Justice,’” and to me, it’s a very readable narrative of JACL from the past, from the 1920s when some of the old-timers got together and decided to call themselves the American Loyalty League.

“At that time, they didn’t even want to use the term ‘Japanese,’” Honda continued. “So, when the delegates got together in San Francisco in 1929, we had delegates from Seattle down to San Diego, Imperial Valley, L.A., and that’s where the name ‘Japanese’ came into the discussion. Amazing, San Francisco didn’t want the name ‘Japanese’ listed because San Francisco always had a lot of anti-Japanese prejudice and discrimination. But people in Seattle, Imperial Valley and L.A. wanted to identify us as a Nisei group, to use the word ‘Japanese.’

“So, I think the history of JACL is best told when you look back at how it got started,” Honda concluded. “Now, all the problems that have come up in the last 10, 15 years not only involve Japanese but also Asians and other minorities. It didn’t diminish the Japanese, but it just shows you that what JACL has to do now is be in the wider picture, taking care of minorities, period.”

Kelly Marie Dunn: Front & Center
The talent manager dishes about Oxygen's 'Girlfriend Confidential: LA.'

By Nuka J. Ko  Reporter

Korean American Kelly Marie Dunn, 34, stepped out from her normal position behind the scenes as a talent manager for her first role as a star on reality TV.

Season 1 of Oxygen's "Girlfriend Confidential: LA" wrapped up on Oct. 8, leaving the cast hoping the show will be greenlit for a second season. The show's cast includes Dunn's real-life friends Eva Marcille ('America's Next Top Model' Season 3 winner). actress Denise Lawton and designer Nikki Chu.

As a college student at the University of Southern California, Dunn got her start in the music industry as an intern for a division within DreamWorks Records. Eventually, the Oregon native took on a position as a product manager for Lady Gaga at Coalition Media Group/Atom Factory.

"The rest is history because that was a life-changing opportunity for me," Dunn said. "I went around the world a couple of times with her and then we are now with the TV show."

Dunn called from New York where she was traveling for work to chat with the Pacific Citizen about "Girlfriend Confidential: LA."

You're used to promoting artists as a talent manager. Were you concerned about being in front of the camera?

Kelly Marie Dunn: This was my first time as an on-camera talent. I had actually turned down a show a year before because I'm a talent manager, which means I'm a very behind-the-scenes type of girl. I don't need to be in front of the camera for my ego or anything. So, it was my first time, and I was extremely hesitant because I'm not an actress. I'm used to having my private life and I'm not used to being treated like the talent.

How old are you and making this reality show?

Dunn: I was Eva's original brainchild. She'd wanted to get into producing. She's a producer on the show, and she had the idea of putting together a show that focused on her friends.

How long have you all been friends?

Dunn: Different amounts of time. Eva and Denyce have been friends the longest. I was introduced to the group, really to Eva, first through mutual friends.

You seem to be the more conservativestyle?

Dunn: I'm not that style. I'm more conservative. I don't think I'm that style. I've never been that style. I'm not that style. I'm more conservative. I don't think I'm that style. I'm more conservative.

Were you raised in a conservative family?

Dunn: My father was in the military. We have all girls, so they were stuck on us. My parents wanted us to be nice, young ladies.

Do your family watch the show?

Dunn: My mother thinks it's cute (laughs). She says, 'I don't think it's for my age group. But if I was in your age group, I'd watch it and really enjoy it.'

If you're the conservative one, how would you label the other girls?

Dunn: I think Eva is more. I think Denyce's more. I think Nikki is Ze. I would say that I am prissy.

Do you ever get tired of Eva and Denyce arguing?

Dunn: You know, it's a little bit exhausting. But they have the longest relationship. Really, the best thing for me to do is stay out of it. Every week it's something new (laughs). And they're going to keep it up. They'll keep it up, make up and set like whatever the issue never happened.

Have you ever been in a bad fight with them?

Dunn: No, anything real bad. You know, I'm pretty confrontational in my work life. But in my personal life... I'm not very confrontational.

You're so fashionable on the show. Are you always so stylish?

Dunn: We are all four very stylish on the show. The difference would be that on a regular day for me, I don't have to change five times.

(From left): Nikki Chu, Kelly Marie Dunn, Eva Marcille and Denyce Lawton are hoping to be greenlit for a second season of Oxygen's "Girlfriend Confidential: LA."
What are you working on aside from the show?
Dunn: I’m really excited to have a fantastic client named Richard Jackson. He is the visual director and choreographer for Lady Gaga. He also is going to be appearing on his own TV show that’s starting next week.

Then, I have a hip-hop group that is signing a deal in Europe. They will be on a plane to London very soon to bring American hip-hop to Europe and be recording artists overseas.

Do you have any funny behind-the-scenes stories from ‘Girlfriend Confidential: LA’?
Dunn: I will tell you that in the last episode, I have a scene where I visited my client at a recording studio, and I was very stressed that day.
I dressed myself in this green polka-dotted dress and I put my hair into two Minnie Mouse buns. I looked in the mirror, and I started balling.
Everybody was like, ‘Are you OK? What’s wrong with you?’ I was like, ‘[Crying] I look like Minnie Mouse!’
And so it was kind of the running joke where there was going to be a scene where I looked like Minnie Mouse.
But then I saw it on camera last week - it was actually kind of cute. It wasn’t even as bad as I thought.

Did all of the girls have a screening party when the show premiered?
Dunn: We all got together for the first episode, and we invited friends. Denise made cuppy cakes, and they were all decorated. She decorated like 200 cuppy cakes individually, and they were personalized.

Your bio says you’re looking for the perfect man. Have you found him yet?
Dunn: I’m still looking. But listen, he’s out there. It doesn’t matter what Eva Marcille thinks.

That doesn’t necessarily mean that he has to have an advanced degree of education; it doesn’t mean that he has to have the fanciest job. It just means that you have to have a hustle about you and want to be greater for yourself and for your family.

That’s not too extreme.
Dunn: It’s not! They make it out to be too much. I don’t know why they think that I’m so picky. I mean I’m picky, but I’m not crazy. You got to keep an open mind and open heart.

If Season 2 doesn’t work out, maybe you can reinvent ‘Girlfriend Confidential: LA’ to be a dating show?
Dunn: Oh, my God [laughs]. That would be just embarrassing.
But people like those shows. (ABCs) ‘The Bachelor’ is still on. That show has been on for like 20 years already.

What shows do you watch?
Dunn: I DVR everything, and I watch it at my leisure.
I like them all. I think that TV is entertaining, and that’s what it’s supposed to do.
One of the main reasons that I wanted to do this show, even though I was so hesitant about it, is because when I was growing up, there were so many girls that looked like me on TV. So, I felt like this strong responsibility to get on TV, be my best me, so that little girls who looked like me could be like, ‘Oh, she’s kind of fabulous, and I can live out my dreams. I can be a good girl, and I can still win.’
I think that the show, the network and Eva have done a really good job of showing that the good girl can win.

John Masaji Sato
Nov. 9, 1919-Sept. 26, 2012

John Masaji Sato was born in Ontario, Ore., on Nov. 9, 1919, and passed away on Sept. 26, 2012, in Glendale, Ariz. John worked on his farm in Ontario until he enlisted in the U.S. Army in October 1941. He met Mei Watanabe from Los Angeles during his military leave, and they were married on April 17, 1945, at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas.

After the war, the couple eventually settled in Los Angeles, where John worked as a landscape gardener for nearly 50 years. He was an active member of the L.A. Southwest Gardener’s Assn., where he served as the editor of its newsletter until he retired in October 1997 and moved to Glendale, Ariz., to live with his daughter and her family.

John enjoyed meeting so many wonderful people in Arizona, and he attended many activities and events with the Japanese American Citizens League, Desert Cross Community Church (formerly called Japanese Free Methodist Church), Japanese Senior Center, Asian Chamber of Commerce, Arizona Buddhist Temple and the Arizona Matsuri.

He was passionate about volunteering at the Japanese Friendship Garden, where he would spend hours pruning the garden’s bamboo.

John was predeceased by his beloved wife, Mei. He is survived by four sisters, Mary Ishida, Maxine Moroka, Lola “Tatie” Hanada and Roseanne Sato; two daughters, Denise Brush (Jeff) and Michele Nambo (Ted); grandchildren, Kristen Steele (Michael), Lauren Namba and Bryan Namba; great-grandchildren, Maren Steele and Malia Steele, as well as many nieces, nephews and family friends.

Memorial donations may be sent to the Japanese Friendship Garden of Phoenix, c/o Norton House, 2700 N. 15th Ave., Phoenix, AZ 85007. Condolences may be offered at www.westresthavenfuneralhome.com.
