2012 in Review

As the year draws to a close, the Pacific Citizen reflects on the defining news and events that shaped our lives in 2012. From historic events occurring within the JACL to remembering the Japan earthquake one year later to the November elections in which many Asian Americans were voted to office even before the P.C. was there to bring you the news that mattered.

But as our special Holiday issue was going to press, an unthinkable American tragedy occurred in Newtown, Conn., that made the nation stop and reflect on news of a whole different matter. In an instant, our lives were affected — stress that seemed monumental before now meant nothing compared to the fragility of life.

However, in spite of the darkness, there is hope. Hope for a better today than yesterday, hope for a better tomorrow than today.

The P.C. is perhaps the most hopeful. The newspaper has been through many changes this year, but with new faces and a new vision, the future is bright. Thank you to our readers and editorial board who have given us your encouragement and support. I promise we'll emerge in 2013 better than ever!

Lastly, I'd like to acknowledge all of the JACL chapters who solicited ads for this year's issue. We hope the commissions earned will continue to help you provide beneficial programs for your youth and keep your chapters strong. And special recognition goes to the P.C.'s hardworking and loyal staff. With your determination, professionalism and dedication to this paper, you have all stepped up in the face of adversity to produce issues you can truly be proud of.

PACIFIC CITIZEN  HOLIDAY ISSUE  2012  7
San Francisco JAs and African Americans collaborate in a redistricting process.

APAs are urged to increase HIV/AIDS testing rates.

The one-year anniversary of the Japan earthquake is commemorated in March.

As the year comes to a close, the Pacific Citizen reflects on the news that made headlines in 2012.

When Trayvon Martin was shot and killed in Sanford, Fla., civil rights groups — including the JACL — demanded a further investigation into the case. The APA community on March 11 reflected on the one-year anniversary of the Japan earthquake and the country's journey to recovery. From the presidential election to the premiere of the controversial play "Allegiance," the P.C. covered the issues that mattered to the Asian Pacific American community.

President Barack Obama is elected for a second term in November.
THE PLAY ‘ALLEGIANCE’
The controversial play “Allegiance: A New American Musical” premieres in San Diego, Calif., on Sept. 19, stirring debate over the depiction of the JACL and former JACL National Secretary Mike Masaoka.

COMFORT WOMEN
A plaque installed in Palisades Park, N.J., in honor of comfort women, who were abducted by the Japanese Imperial Army during WWII, draws international attention.

PVT. DANNY CHEN CASE
Pvt. Danny Chen, 19, who grew up in Chinatown, N.Y., and was deployed to Afghanistan, was allegedly subjected to verbal and physical abuse on Oct. 3 shortly before he was found shot from an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound.

An image of Frank Tanabe, a 93-year-old WWII veteran, casting his last vote before the 2012 elections goes viral.

L.A. County Board of Supervisors and Japanese officials hold a cherry blossom tree dedication at Grant Park in Downtown Los Angeles.

L.A. RIOTS
April 29 marked the 20th anniversary of the Los Angeles riots. A survey indicated that L.A. residents felt safer in the city since the uprising.

Contributing writer Christine Fukushima reported on the rise of women in sumo wrestling.

APA groups across the nation called for an investigation in the Trayvon Martin killing after the 17-year-old teenager was fatally shot in Sanford, Fla., in February while walking home after buying Skittles and an ice tea. The JAACL, in a statement, called for justice to be served.

ARTS

HANNAH CARTER JAPANESE GARDEN

UCLA announces plans to sell the Hannah Carter Japanese Garden, which was purchased by Edward Carter and his wife in 1965. Preservationists and community members rally to save the cultural landmark.

APAS IN CONGRESS

Asian Pacific Americans elected in November to serve in the 113th U.S. Congress include (from left) Mazie Hirono (D-Hawaii), Tammy Duckworth (D-IL), Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii), Grace Meng (D-NY) and Mark Takano (D-CA).

They came from all walks of life. Tall, thin, short, plump, freshly scrubbed, worn for wear—they all made their way to an auditorium in the heart of Little Tokyo. Smells of fresh coffee and sweet donuts greeted them from inside the room. Tables were filled with posters of faded photographs that depicted memories of long ago. Each of the individuals took a turn around the room greeting old friends, speaking with new ones, relaxing in a chair, waiting for the program to start. While a cold rain drizzled outside against the background of the gray sky, the individuals inside the room buzzed warmly with anticipation. It was a reunion of sorts—a reunion of individuals who had all lived through internment but who all had different stories to tell.

This was the scene of “Speaking of Camp...” an event jointly sponsored by the Friends of Manzanar and the Manzanar Committee. Held Dec. 1 at Maryknoll/ St. Francis Xavier Japanese Catholic Center in downtown Los Angeles, the event was attended by dozens of individuals. Videographers were also in attendance at the event to record internees’ thoughts and experiences of camp life that was to be collected in a set of oral histories.

“We think it’s important to tell these wartime stories. It was a terrible travesty, and we can learn from that in the years ahead,” said Rose Ochi, chair of the Friends of Manzanar.

A group of individuals gathered onstage to encourage others to share their experiences. Bruce Embery, co-chair of the Manzanar Committee, spoke of his family’s own plight at Manzanar. As part of the Manzanar Committee, he has helped lead pilgrimages to the Manzanar National Historic Site for the past 40 years. His mother was 18 when she arrived at Manzanar and dreams of attending college; however, she wasn’t able to fulfill this goal until her 40s. Embery spoke about the forced removals and the lives that were disrupted as a result of the internment camps.

“People don’t know what happened—they might know it vaguely,” Embery said. “We want to preserve their story. They are part of our history that we have, and we must make sure everyone knows about it.”

With the holidays looming close by, Mas Okui, a retired school teacher, described his experience growing up at Manzanar. Known as one of the famous flag fishermen, Okui first arrived at Manzanar as a child and attended school dutifully like many of the other adolescents at the camp. One of the barracks served as a classroom, with low lighting and bare walls. They received books that were torn, dirty and broken—even in their disturbed shape, the students were still happy to have the materials from which to learn.

Apart from his classroom experience at Manzanar, Oehi distinctly remembers celebrating Christmas in 1942 at Manzanar. Held in Barrack 34, Christmas included a Santa dressed in a red suit and cotton beard, along with a set of presents. That year, he received a coloring book, complete with a metal paint box.

“As a teacher, every year people could never understand at my school how I had so much valued goods — well, it was because I would tell my story,” said Oehi, who told students about his childhood at Manzanar during the holiday season while collecting canned goods to give to the underserved.

One man spoke about his experiences at an internment camp in the Midwest. For Charlie Hasegawa, February 1942 is a date that is clearly seared in his mind. He was 18 years old when Pearl Harbor was hit in Hawaii, and he grew up never knowing that he was born in Japan. Soon after that, all changed.

“I was almost going to escape,” Hasegawa said on his attempt to flee the police.

Hasegawa was sent to an internment camp in Bannock, N.D., he recounted his distance for the food and remembered about living alongside 5,000 other Japanese Americans.

“I’m the only survivor right now — they’re all gone,” Hasegawa said. “Since the war, it’s been bittersweet.”

Having heard other people speak about their experiences onstage, these friends decided to take the plunge and have their stories recorded by a videographer.

The small group consisted of sisters Yumiko Miyoshi-Ishii and Kazeko Miyoshi, along with their childhood friend, Chiharu Kuro Katagawa. Both families were involved in the nursing business in Greater Los Angeles before the start of World War II. They described their experience relocating to Manzanar with their parents, specifically remembering how they could only take a handful of things that they could carry with them to camp.

“They never spoke about the war or tension — it was like we were living in a bubble,” Miyoshi said.

Reminiscing on camp living, Ishii, Miyoshi and Katagawa spoke of some of the hardships. “Being in the desert, we had the sand and the wind would rattle the windows. We tried to cover the windows, and my mom put chopsticks in them so that they wouldn’t rattle,” Katagawa said.

On the other hand, they detailed the simple pleasures they experienced at the camp, like digging a hole in the dirt floor to watch movies outside or packaging fresh tomatoes with which to play.

“My mother would give us jam — sugar was a real commodity that you couldn’t have,” Miyoshi said.

Recovering after the camp was an adjustment for all three women.

“You know you were going to be picked on — you looked like the enemy, and you felt that you had to be a good,” Katagawa said. “No matter where you were, you did the best that you could. You could never do anything shameful to the family name.”

With these stories in mind, the National Park Service is working to preserve these memories with the development of a new section at the Manzanar National Historic Site. Known as Block 14, it will include two demonstration barracks. While one barrack will show the living conditions Japanese Americans first encountered on their arrival to Manzanar in 1942, the other barrack will show how barracks typically evolved during that time.

PACIFIC CITIZEN HOLIDAY ISSUE 2012 21
Turret Gunner BEN KUROKI
Took Aim at Germany, Japan

By George T. Johnston
Contributor

The day after Japan attacked Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, a young Nebraska volunteer was told to get ready for his homeland.

After visiting the recruiting office with his brother, Fred, the farm boy waited — but the Army never called.

Ben Kuroki realized the U.S. Army didn’t want him, his younger brother or any other Americans whose lineage was from Japan.

Though it wasn’t easy for Kuroki to get the opportunity to serve during World War II, once he got his chance, the Nisei (second-generation Japanese American) would fly 38 missions as a turret gunner, 30 in a B-24 over Europe and North Africa and 8 in a B-29 over the Pacific and Japan.

He also flew in a raid on oil fields and refineries in Ploesti, Romania, a mission in which 52 of the 178 B-24s didn’t return. Also in that WWII attack, 318 fellow Americans were killed and 127 became prisoners of war. All participants were awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross, one of those medals Kuroki would receive, along with the Air Medal with five oak leaf clusters.

Decades later, the Nebraska Press Assn. gave Kuroki its President’s Award, which was followed by an honorary doctorate from his alma mater, the University of Nebraska.

The Smithsonian Institution dedicated a permanent display to him at its American History Museum. He also received the Audie Murphy Award — presented to veterans who went beyond the call during their service and, thereafter, became a positive role model for people — and, presented by President George W. Bush in 2003, the Distinguished Service Medal.

Before any of that occurred, Kuroki had to find a way to serve.

“My high school friends were going in right and left. Washington told all the recruiting stations to classify the Japanese Americans as aliens,” Kuroki told boioster’s Business Daily. “There was no way they were going to take an alien.”

Now 85 and living in Camarillo, Calif., with his wife, Shige, Kuroki said, “I had to fight like hell to fight for my country.”

Still out of uniform 71 years ago, Kuroki heard on the radio that the new Army Air Corps was enlisting in Grand Island, 150 miles from his Hershey, Neb., home.

“I immediately got on the phone and talked to the recruiting sergeant and asked him if nationality was a problem. He said, ‘ heck no. I get two bucks for everybody I sign up,’ recalled Kuroki.

Because of his Midwest roots, Kuroki was immune to President Franklin Roosevelt’s February 1942 order that removed everyone of Japanese descent — numbering 120,000, two-thirds of whom were U.S. citizens — from the West Coast.

The Nebraska was therefore one of just a handful of Nisei to serve in Europe during WWII who was not a member of the Army’s segregated 100th Battalion/442nd Regimental Combat Team and the only second-generation Japanese American to fly bombing missions on the European and Pacific fronts.

Jean Luthers’s book “Lucky Era: The True Story of Ben Kuroki, World War II Hero” recounts how the Kuroki brothers had to peel potatoes and wash dishes while fellow recruits received more military training at Sheppard Field in Texas.

Then, Fred Kuroki was mysteriously kicked out of the Air Corps. Brother Ben worried he’d be next. He was.

Kuroki made a heartfelt appeal to Lt. Charles Brennan, begging to stay in the 9th Air Force’s Philipps Bombardment Group.

The officer overrode two high-ranking noncommissioned officers who wanted to “tiedeed me out of the squadron” and ordered the Nisei’s return to the roster. “He saved my neck,” Kuroki said.

He recalls Brennan backing him.

“Kuroki goes with us and that’s that,”

In August 1943, just before Kuroki’s group was to leave for England for additional training, he was again scratched from the roster. This time, Col. Edward Timberlake overrode the order, barking: “Bring him along.”

As a technical sergeant, Kuroki became a B-24 turret gunner with the nickname Most Honorable Son, courtesy of his crewmates. According to Bill Kubota’s documentary “Honorable Son: Ben Kuroki’s Amazing War Story,” the Air Corps required B-24 crew members to complete 25 missions; most averaged 10.

After 25 missions, Kuroki volunteered for five more. He should have been killed on his 30th mission, in late 1943 over Munster, Germany, when flak shattered his Plexiglas turret. As chance would have it, his radio man below tagged on Kuroki’s pants leg, and just as he bent down to talk, the turret was struck. He was knocked out, but unharmed.

After that, in January 1944, the War Department gave Kuroki a new assignment: public relations. It started out with static. According to Carroll Stewart’s booklet “The Most Honorable Son: Ben Kuroki,” the war hero was about to be interviewed on a popular radio show in Los Angeles in January 1944 when the plug was pulled at the last moment just as a producer on Ginny Simms’ radio show got cold feet at the idea of a Japanese American discussing his perspective on the war. The news coverage of the cancellation led to an invitation to speak at San Francisco’s Commonwealth Club the next month.

“He was really well spoken,” filmmaker Kubota told IDB. “He was really well spoken,” filmmaker Kubota told IDB. “He keeps saying he was just this farmer from Nebraska, but he was important, almost a statesman in a way — not that he sought that out.”

A nervous Kuroki spoke for 40 minutes about the trials he overcame to join the Air Corps, the Fliers raid, seeing his pals die and how he learned the true meaning of equality and tolerance after 15 months of combat. He received a 10-minute standing ovation.

Kuroki then received his next orders: off to three of the 10 confinement camps to persuade fellow Japanese Americans to serve their country. “I was really shocked to see my own people in these internment camps like that,” he said.

With the war far from over, the military needed every able-bodied man — including incarcerated Japanese Americans.

Although Kuroki was admired by most younger Japanese Americans, his Heart Mountain, Wyo., appearance didn’t exactly draw a ticket-tape parade from those who felt the federal government had no right to draft them while their rights were abrogated.

Still, Kuroki swayed many of his fellow Nisei toward wearing Army green in the segregated 442nd Regiment, which served in Europe and North Africa in WWII and became the most highly decorated unit in U.S. military history for size and length of service.

Heartbroken upon learning his childhood pal, Gordy Jorgenson, was killed on the Solomon Islands by the Japanese, Kuroki put in for service as a gunner aboard the new B-29 — but the War Department declined Japanese Americans from serving in bombers in the Pacific.

Kuroki received heavyweight backing from Monroe Deutsch, provost at the University of California, Berkeley; Chester Rowell, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle; and Ray Wilbur, former president of Stanford University — all of whom heard the young soldier at the Commonwealth Club. Their appeal to Secretary of War Henry Stimson led to an exception, granted by Stimson himself, thanks to Kuroki’s “splendid record.”

By mid-1944, Kuroki was flying out of Tinian Island, near Saipan, on the way to 28 bombing missions. When his B-29 dropped bombs on Japan, he felt for the women and children on the ground, he told filmmaker Kubota.

After Kuroki’s last mission, according to Stewart’s booklet, a drunken fellow GI entered his barracks and yelled at him: “Tojo and Kuroki, damned Japs!”

Angered, Kuroki countered, “You can call Tojo a damned Jap, but don’t call me one.”

A fight erupted, and the unarmed Kuroki was almost killed by his knife-wielding assailant.

He was hospitalized with 24 natures to his scalp. “That’s when they dropped the atomic bomb,” Kuroki said, referring to the Enola Gay — the B-29 that had been parked next to his B-29, the Sad Saki — which dropped the first of two of the weapons on Japanese cities. “The war ended, everybody jumped in planes and went home right away. They put me on a slow Liberty ship, and it took 21 days to get to San Francisco.”

After recovering, he met his wife in Utah, used the GI Bill to get a journalism degree from the University of Nebraska in 1950, launched a career as a newspaperman and raised three daughters.

The world nearly forgot about Ben Kuroki. Among those who didn’t were fellow soldiers eager to land him greater recognition. Kuroki said he was invited to the White House four times in three years, with President Bush telling him on one of those visits, “I am proud to tell you, America is a better place because of you, Ben.”

(Happy New Year)
When I reflect on 2012, in my mind it has been a year dominated by politics. Perhaps that’s stating the obvious in an election year, but then, politics always seem to be at the forefront of my mind.

Singed in my memory are several things: the Republicans filibustering the Senate to stop any and all bills they didn’t love; Paul Ryan boasting about his budget plan, which in reality was a vague synopsis of an even vaguer plan; the circus that became the Republican primary debates with its bevy of candidates out-clowning each other. I mean, really, did anyone take that group seriously?

What became obvious was this: Those vying for the Republican nomination were pandering to the right wing of the party. I don’t mean to the conservative elements but to the extreme right, and they kept tripping over each other to prove who could be more conservative and extreme. It also seemed to me that in so doing, they each showed how easy, and sad, it is to sell out to one’s own ambition.

As 2012 progressed from January through the spring and then on to the long days of summer, I watched with frustration President Barack Obama’s ongoing inability to negotiate with the Republican leadership on issues of major importance to the country — things like the national debt ceiling, the budget and on finding measures to help ease the pain of unemployment. At times, it made me long for the days of someone like President Lyndon B. Johnson, who was more like a battering ram than a diplomat.

It was a year in which partisan politics became more important than doing what’s best for the nation, where Republicans stuck to their pledge to ensure that President Obama would not be re-elected by refusing to consider any measures that could lead to an economic recovery. The term ‘fiscal responsibility’ became the battle cry of the right wing, but fiscal responsibility at what cost, I wondered.

It was a year in which the intransigence of Republicans in both chambers made me wonder if their pledge to Grover Norquist’s Americans for Tax Reform took precedence over their sworn pledge of office to carry out their constitutional responsibility to protect the well-being of the nation from threats both foreign and domestic . . . like Norquist’s egomaniacal hold on Republicans.

In June, there were the Supreme Court decisions on the Affordable Care Act, aka “Obamacare,” on Arizona’s anti-immigration measure and on Citizens United — all judicial decisions but nonetheless all steeped in politics. And in an election year in which we found ourselves on one side or the other of the political landscape, there was the presidential campaign and an election result that delighted Democrats but baffled Republicans to the point of disbelief and shock.

The presidential election sharply defined the differences between Democrats and Republicans. The Grand Old Party came out looking like its members didn’t care much for or about women, African-Americans, Latinos, trade unions, the middle class, the 47 percent within the 99 percent, young voters, marriage equality for gays, education, the environment, climate change and the separation of church and state.

Instead, Republicans turned their appeal to the wealthy and white blue-collar workers and rural voters, choosing to look back to a twice-failed trickle-down economic theory that felt like backward social policies.

The Tea Party also forced its will on the Republican Party in 2012 and made it virtually impossible to negotiate any compromises on issues that had even a hint of fiscal impact, forcing Republicans to take extreme stands and pushing the nation even further right than it already was. And as the year began to wind down, 2012 found one last juicy scandal that began when two ambitious women overstepped their bounds and two Army generals who should have known better didn’t, thus ending with the disgrace of one and the demise of the other’s future military career.

Lastly, to put a final imprint on the year, Senate Republicans assaulted U.N. Ambassador Susan Rice for comments she made about the Benghazi terrorist attacks on the Sunday talk shows, criticizing her for presenting faulty intelligence information about the attack that killed U.S. Ambassador to Libya Christopher Stevens, forgetting that another Rice, Condoleezza, presented false intelligence information to the world, leading the U.S. to a senseless war in Iraq. And it was an army of Republican senators who defended those doctored reports. What do you mean that politics is full of hypocrisy?

But there’s political hope in our future. President Obama made it clear in his post-election press conference that the economic policy he argued for throughout his campaign will rule the day and that he will be the strong and forceful leader many of us have yearned for. As Republicans criticize the president for leading the nation to the fiscal cliff, their threats are empty because either way, the fulfillment of the president’s election promises on tax reform appear more inevitable as we march to the end of the year. Seeing that inevitability, Republicans are beginning to break ranks to show that the nation’s interest comes first.

If this column sounds negative, it’s because it is. Although I’m a die-hard Democrat, I don’t gloat over the seeming demise of the Republican Party. In fact, I worry about where the party has gone in its desperate effort to appeal to the extreme right as much as I worry about how the Democratic Party has shifted so far right that it no longer resembles the party that brought us the Civil Rights Act and the equally important Voting Rights Act, the party that had the conviction to end segregation and the courage to bring great social (not socialist) programs such as Social Security and Medicare.

I worry because I believe we’re far better off with two parties that represent core beliefs without their fringe taking over as the Tea Party and Christian right and Americans for Tax Reform have done with the Republican Party.

And I worry that the Congress Newt Gingrich left in his wake is so embittered and partisan that the concept of politics in Washington, D.C., has to be redefined as a battleground rather than a place where opposing views can come together with the resolve to find solutions to the nation’s problems through compromise. Search and destroy is a tactic best left on the battlefields of war — not in Congress.

I’m hopeful that President Obama’s press conference and the new receptiveness of some Republicans signal a change in the coming year. I’m also hopeful that the year to come will be better than this, the year that was.

National Highlights

The nation’s oldest and largest Asian American civil rights organization underwent historic changes in 2012. On March 1, Priscilla Ouchida became the first woman in the history of the organization to be named JACL national director. And in July, David Lin became the first American of Chinese heritage to be elected national president of the JACL.

With its new leadership in place, the JACL continued to pave the way for civil and human rights while helping the APA community maintain its cultural roots and values.

Six people were killed and three wounded on Aug. 5 when a gunman opened fire at a Sikh temple in Wisconsin. JACL teamed up with the OCA to create a fund to support the victims. JACLer Greg Murutani (pictured above) attended a candlelight vigil in San Francisco to support the Sikh community.

JACL issued a statement on April 25 condemning Washington, D.C., Councilman Marion Barry's disparaging remarks about Asian American business owners in the city. The organization was one of many Asian Pacific American groups to demand an apology from the councilman.

When President Barack Obama publicly announced in an interview with ABC News' Robin Roberts that he supports same-sex marriage, the JACL praised the commander in chief for his "historic stance."
The P.C. salutes the many JACL chapters who honored our war veterans in 2012.

PLACER COUNTY Nearly 500 people gathered on Nov. 10 in Loomis, Calif., for the Placer County Congressional Gold Medal Ceremony, which honored Nisei who served in the military between 1941 and 1946. The ceremony also included the awarding of 14 posthumous Bronze Stars, the fourth-highest combat award of the U.S. Armed Forces. In all, more than 80 Gold Medals were awarded on this day either to living veterans or to their family members. Pictured above are veterans (back row, from left) Shig Takahashi, George Hamasaki, Anna Hamasaki, Norimasa Kamada, Frank Kagami, Leo Masuda, James Iso and (front row, from left) Mack Toyama, Tom Takahashi, George Kahului, Masao Hamasaki, Goichi Hamasaki, George Goto and Frank Fujita.

The Northern California Western Nevada Pacific (NCWNP) District is the largest district within the JACL, both geographically and in terms of members and number of chapters. At the national level, the district increased its presence this year with the selection in March of Priscilla Ouchida as JACL national director. Priscilla has spent her entire life in Sacramento and was very active in the Sacramento chapter. Also hailing from the Sacramento chapter is Miko Sawamura, the new JACL vp for general operations.

This year, many NCWNP chapters held local Gold Medal ceremonies to honor Nisei veterans who served in World War II. Special ceremonies were held in Sonoma County, Marysville, Placer County, Sacramento, Florin, San Francisco, San Jose, Watsonville, Cortez/Livingston, Monterey and Honolulu.

In addition, the Berkeley Chapter has been supporting the documentary "Honor and Sacrifice: Nisei Patriots in the MIS." Roy Matsumoto is a life member of the Berkeley Chapter and is a MIS veteran who was a member of the legendary "Merrill's Marauders."

In October, the Placer County Chapter unveiled a statue (top) honoring the 442nd RCT and the Rescue of the Lost Texas Battalion. This statue in Roseville and accompanying monuments also honors all Nisei WWII veterans and their families who were unjustly incarcerated.

The district also jointly sponsored the Memorial Day Ceremony with the Golden Gate Nisei Post at the National Cemetery in San Bruno. A potluck luncheon was held at JACL headquarters in San Francisco following the ceremony.

— David Unruhe, district governor
Clovis — A tribute to the heroic Nisei veterans from the Central Valley was held on Feb. 19 at the Clovis Veterans Memorial Building. Replica Congressional Gold Medals were given at the Day of Remembrance event. “Because many of our local veterans could not travel to the capital for the national ceremony, we wanted to take the opportunity here at home to pay tribute to their courage and patriotism,” said Dale Ikeda, event co-chair.

Oregon — Twenty Nisei World War II veterans were presented with Congressional Gold Medals at a local ceremony held on Feb. 26. The event was organized by the Oregon Nikkei Endowment and the Oregon Nisei Veterans. More than 450 people attended the event at the Multnomah Athletic Club in Portland to recognize soldiers of the 442nd Regiment, 100th Battalion and Military Intelligence Service. The Gold Medals were presented to the veterans by Congressman Earl Blumenauer and retired Lt. Gen. Joseph Peterson and Brigadier Gen. Bruce Prunk.
The Pacific Northwest District Council mourns the passing of Elaine Akagi. During more than fifty years in JACL and in the field of Education, she has touched tens of thousands of lives and has enriched each and every one of them. She was a very special lady, and we all miss her very much.

Idaho — Idaho Gov. Butch Otter hosted a Day of Remembrance proclamation signing ceremony on Feb. 20. Among the 65 attendees were Nisei veterans who recently received the Congressional Gold Medal. “When you are honored by your country, it’s a magnificent feeling,” said Nisei veteran Stanley Watanabe. “Serving your country is a privilege and an honor.”

Salt Lake City — An audience of more than 1,000 gathered on Feb. 18 at the Grand Ballroom of Salt Lake City’s Grand America Hotel to honor heroic Nisei soldiers of World War II at a Utah Regional Celebration (above). A total of 141 replica Congressional Gold Medals were awarded to 36 surviving Nisei veterans and the families of 105 deceased members of the 100th Infantry Battalion, 442nd Regimental Combat Team and the Military Intelligence Service. Among the 141 honorees were three women who served in the Women’s Army Corps.

ARIZONA The JACL Arizona Chapter Japanese Senior Center celebrated Veterans Day in October by honoring veterans (pictured above) who served in various branches of the U.S. military. The veterans were given awards and recognition for their dedicated years of service.

ILLINOIS In April, the Nikkei World War II Veterans Tribute recognized the contributions of Nisei veterans who served during WWII but are ineligible for the Congressional Gold Medal. “As wonderful as the Congressional Gold Medal is, we wanted to include the many Japanese Americans who served with no less distinction,” said Howard Heshima, chair of the tribute.

Washington, D.C. — The Washington, D.C. chapter remained extremely busy in 2012. In September, it held the sixth annual JACh Gala "A Salute to Champions," where Japanese Ambassador to the United States Ichiro Fujisaki was among the many honorees. In November, National Director Friscilla Ouchida attended President Obama’s first public remarks since his re-election. Obama called upon Congress to work with him on preserving lower tax rates. And as the year ended, the chapter is hard at work planning the 2013 JACh Convention, set for July 24-26 in Washington, D.C.

Los Angeles — The PSW thanks the chapters and our members for their work in supporting the JACh’s mission to advocate for the civil rights of all people. This year, the PSW District launched its first intergenerational program, Katarou Histories, in the San Fernando Valley. This unique program, sponsored by AT&T, brought together individuals from many generations to share their stories and discover the hidden JA history of the valley. The Colleget Japanese American Internship, sponsored by Southern California Edison, wrapped up its second year and provided hands-on community-based advocacy experience to dedicated college students.

The PSW once again participated in Camp Musubi, a middle school JA heritage and cultural program, and Bridging Communities, a high school interethnic collaboration program.

— Eri Kameyama, PSW program associate

This year’s National JACL Scholarship Program awarded a total of $61,000 to the 25 most-deserving applicants in their respective categories. This year, the student applicants were asked to address the following statement: “One young person remarked, ‘Our generation believes in civil rights, but don’t feel we need to join a civil rights organization like the JACL’.”

We congratulate all of 2012’s student scholars and wish them well in their future endeavors.

Ties between Colorado and Japan were strengthened in 2012

By Gil Asakawa

This was a good year for Japanese and Japanese Americans in Colorado. A lot of the credit goes to Consul General Hitoshi Ono, who came to Denver late last year. He has truly made a concerted effort to reach out to the local JA community.

Previous consul generals have invited local JA leaders to their official residence for private dinners and special receptions and events, including an annual reception at a downtown Denver hotel to mark the birthday of Emperor Akihito, a national holiday in Japan, celebrated Dec. 23 on his actual birthday.

The Birthday Reception is a lively annual reunion for the local Japanese and JA community. We’ve been invited for years, and we end up seeing a lot of people only at this event. It’s a great opportunity to catch up with one another.

But Consul General Ono and his staff do much more than just hold a party every December. During the past year, he has interacted with the community in lots of other ways, too — partly because of the aftermath of the March 11, 2011, earthquake and tsunami that devastated northeast Japan. Ono arrived in Colorado in the wake of a number of fundraising efforts for disaster relief, including events and donation drives by the Japanese community.

I recently spoke to a graduate student working on the JA community’s response to the temblor and tsunami. Although many Japanese Americans don’t feel a strong connection to Japan outside of some family traditions, familiarity with Japanese food and the habit of taking off shoes in their homes, the March 11 disaster reconnected all Japanese Americans to the country of their roots. They may not have reached out to contact distant relatives (most Japanese Americans’ family origins were in southern Japan’s prefectures anyway, so they weren’t affected by the tragedy), but the disaster may have nudged their connection to the country out of sympathy and empathy.

The outpouring of emotion and support for Japan was so genuine that Consul General Ono thanked the community during a one-year memorial reception in March that featured the Kyogakuranoko drum group from Matsukawa, Japan. Ono and his staff (and his charming wife, Eiko) have been busy marking anniversaries and building bridges with the Japanese American community all year long.

And because this was the 100th anniversary of the gift of cherry blossom trees from Japan to the United States, the Consulate held a series of plantings of cherry blossom seedlings throughout Colorado. At many of these events, the Consulate featured Japanese cultural performances and flower-arranging displays by Denver-area artisans.

Consul General Ono and his staff have also brought Japanese artists to the area to perform free concerts, including the Abeya Tsugaru Shamisen Ensemble, which features members who are national champions of the stringed instrument in Japan.

Many of these events were well-attended by local Japanese and Japanese Americans. Previous consul generals have also brought Japanese culture to Denver, though not as often. But Consul General Ono has added a new layer of outreach into the community by aggressively awarding commendations from his office and also facilitating recognition of local JAs by the Japanese government, including not just Coloradans but also recipients from Utah, which the consulate also covers.

Earlier this year, he awarded the Order of the Rising Sun, Gold Rays with Neck Ribbon, to Dr. William I. Higuchi for his work in educational and research exchanges with Japan, in addition to his role as special adviser to the Heart Mountain Wyoming Foundation, which works to keep alive the memory of the concentration camp there.

Consul General Ono then awarded the Commendation of the Consul General of Japan to two Denverites and a Denver organization for their contribution to ensuring a mutual understanding and establishing closer ties between Japan and the U.S.: Seiji Tanaka, a longtime leader of the Japanese Association of Colorado; Haruhisa Yamamoto, former owner of Denver Tofu Company; and Ikehana International Chapter 66, one of 69 branches of Ikehana International in the United States, which promotes “friendship through... flowers” with its artful flower arrangements.

In July, the Consulate awarded the Foreign Affairs Ministry’s Foreign Minister’s Commendations for promoting mutual understanding between Japan and the U.S. In this region, the recipients included attorney Richard Clark, a founder of the Japan America Society of Colorado (and a behind-the-scenes power who helped bring United Airline’s direct flight from Denver to Tokyo, which launches next March); Denver County Court Judge Kerry Hada; and Mr. Raymond Uno, president of the Japanese Community Preservation Committee of Salt Lake City.

In November, Kimiko Side, a longtime leader of the Japanese community who was instrumental in the Denver-Takayama Sister Cities relationship, as well as in many organizations including JACL and JASC, received the Order of the Rising Sun, Gold and Silver Rays, an imperial decoration and the highest civilian honor conferred by the country. Side was flown to Japan to receive the award from Emperor Akihito.

And finally, Yamamoto, the man who received the Consul General’s commendation for running Denver Tofu for many years long before tofu caught the fancy of mainstream America, was just flown to Japan to receive the Minister of Agriculture’s Award for Overseas Promotion of Japanese Food.

On top of the recognition for so many individuals, Denver was buzzing with Japan-related news and events all year, including a major Japan-related exhibit at the Denver Botanic Gardens, a Japanese Gardens conference, the opening and dedication of the Botanic Garden’s Bill Hosokawa Bonsai Pavilion and Tea Garden and the installation of a bust of Hosokawa, a JA community leader and longtime journalist, at both the Botanic Gardens and the Denver Public Library. And, of course, the direct flight from Denver International Airport to Tokyo’s Narita Airport on United’s brand-new 787 Dreamliner jet was announced last spring and will start service on March 31, 2013.

There’s a lot for the Japanese and Japanese American community in Colorado to be proud of from this past year. We may be a much smaller population than on the West Coast, but we’re making an impact here — and we’re building ever-stronger bridges between Denver and Japan.

Have a Happy Holiday and a great New Year, everyone!

A COMMUNITY LOSES ITS ‘BIG SISTER’
Honoring Frances Hashimoto

The passing of Frances Hashimoto leaves a hollow in the heart of Little Tokyo that will be very tough to fill.

By M. J. Nomura
Contributor

The gray skies over Downtown Los Angeles Nov. 15 only emphasized the pall cast onto what would have been a joyous occasion. The large gathering sat silent as Joel Friedman strode solemnly to make an offering on the altar erected for his wife, whose absence loomed heavily in the hearts of those present.

The ceremony was for the dedication of the Frances K. Hashimoto Plaza, at East Second and Azusa Streets in Little Tokyo, where the late Mikawaya CEO and community stalwart could be seen regularly, chatting with locals, on her way to her sweets shop or busy in her efforts to help the historically Japanese enclave continue to thrive.

After a long battle, Hashimoto succumbed to lung cancer on Nov. 4 at the age of 69. Her health had been improving to the point where she hoped to attend the previously arranged ceremony at the plaza, but her condition suddenly worsened as the dedication drew nearer.

“She was improving and doing really well, and while we knew it wasn’t going to be a long, long time, we believed she was going to be able to return to going out, return to going to dinner, return to visiting and seeing all the people she loved,” Friedman said at the dedication. “Unfortunately, it wasn’t to be the case.”

Hashimoto’s path to becoming one of Little Tokyo’s most influential and progressive business leaders began almost from birth. Her family business, which has spanned 102 years and three generations, flourished under her stewardship after she left her career as a teacher to take over the daily operations.

From the single, tiny Mikawaya shop in Little Tokyo, Hashimoto expanded the very definition of Japanese sweets, most notably with the invention of mochi ice cream, opening three more retail outlets across Southern California. The combination of ice cream wrapped in traditional rice cake — mochi — was an instant hit and is now found in mainstream stores such as Trader Joe’s, Safeway and Ralphs.

Hashimoto was born on Aug. 26, 1943, at the World War II internment camp in Poston, Ariz. Her parents, Koroku and Haru, were among the more than 120,000 persons of Japanese ancestry who were forced to leave their homes and close their businesses in order to be relocated in isolated communities for much of the war. The Hashimoto family’s confectionery store, Mikawaya, which opened in Little Tokyo in 1910, was among the businesses shuttered.

In December 1945, shortly after the Japanese surrender that ended the war, Mikawaya reopened in Little Tokyo at 244 E. 1st St. Hashimoto grew up in nearby Boyle Heights, attending Hollenbeck Junior High and Roosevelt High School before moving on to the University of Southern California.

Former Rafu Shimpo editor Ellen Endo, who attended Hollenbeck with Hashimoto, remembered her classmate as a free spirit who pushed the limits, going so far as to wear her fingernails long and painted in school.

At the behest of her mother, Hashimoto abandoned her career as an elementary school teacher after four years and took over the reins as Mikawaya’s CEO. From her first day in 1970, she looked to expand the reach of her family’s decades-old store, with an eye toward reaching a decidedly non-Japanese client base.

A bakery was opened on Fourth Street in 1974 and locations were subsequently opened in Torrance and Gardena, Calif., Honolulu, Hawaii, and a new Little Tokyo Store in the Japanese Village Plaza.

The idea that would cement Mikawaya in the history books came from her husband, who sometime in the early 1990s suggested encasing a lump of ice cream inside a sheath of mochi.

Aside from her business, Hashimoto was a tireless advocate of U.S.-Japan relations, actively promoting ties between the sister cities of Los Angeles and Nagoya. She was at the forefront for organizations such as Nisei Week, helping to bring together business concerns for the promotion of greater Little Tokyo on both sides of the Pacific. In 1982, she became the first woman to serve as chairperson of the Nisei Week Japanese Festival.

Endo said the push to continue and preserve Nisei Week — in spite of declining attendance and the rapidly changing demographics of the Little Tokyo area — came from Hashimoto’s firm commitment to expose and educate young Nikkei about their history and heritage.

Hashimoto further served her community on the boards of several organizations, including the Little Tokyo Business Assn., where she was president from 1994-2008. She also sat on the boards of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce of Southern California and the Japanese American Community and Cultural Center.

A solemn honor was bestowed upon Hashimoto last spring, when the Japanese government awarded her the Order of the Rising Sun, Gold and Silver Rays, for her accomplishments in U.S.-Japan relations.

Instantly recognizable by her breezy smile and golden locks, Hashimoto took great pride in greeting visitors to Little Tokyo, especially during the summer Nisei Week festival.

Joanne Kamamoto, who worked for years with Hashimoto on a variety of community projects, said, “I don’t think people knew just how much she did for the community and for Little Tokyo. Often, she would do things without getting credit or recognition.”

L.A. City Councilmember Jan Perry, who had been friends with Hashimoto long before taking public office, introduced a motion for the council to adjourn in her honor after the Nov. 6 meeting.

As a testament to the great number of lives she touched, funeral services for Frances Hashimoto were held in the 880-seat Aratani Japan America Theatre in Little Tokyo.

“She was my big sister and a big sister to many,” Perry said.
