KAKEHASHI STUDENTS EMBARK ON A 10-DAY VISIT TO JAPAN

By JACL National Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Forty-three Japanese American young adults traveled to Japan on July 15 as part of the Kakehashi Project, a program organized by the Japan Ministry of Foreign Affairs, JACL and the Japan Foundation to cultivate cross-cultural relationships and exchanges between Japan and the U.S.

The 10-day all-expense paid trip included an initial tour of Tokyo before the group split off into two smaller groups to visit either the Japanese city of Fukushima or Kyoto by way of the ShinKansen (Japanese bullet train).

The Fukushima group began its trip with a visit to Suki Cinemon Company and the Fukushima Prefectural Office. Later, the group attended Fukushima University to learn about revitalization efforts following the aftermath of the 3.11 triple disaster.

At Ten’ei Village, students participated in agricultural workshops and cultural exchanges with local students. Some Kakehashi students performed dance routines for local Japanese students in exchange for a musical recital by the local junior high school brass band. Other stops included the Ouchi Juku and Tsuruga-jo Castle.

The Kyoto group had an equally busy schedule, starting with a Shodo Workshop at the Japan Foundation and a company visit to Kyoto. Other highlights included a college exchange at Doshisha University, a visit to Shiga Biyo Shrine, a walking tour of Kiyomizu-dera and a tea ceremony at Chotoku Temple. The group wrapped up its Kyoto trip with a tour of the Kinkakuji Temple and Nijo Castle.

At press time, both groups have returned to Tokyo, where they will stay until the end of their trip on July 24.

In Tokyo, the Fukushima and Kyoto groups will visit Tokyo University and Meiji Gakuin University, respectively. In addition to touring the Diet Building, Japanese Overseas Migration Museum and the Imabari National Museum of Emerging, Science and Innovation, among other activities.

A MOTHER’S TAKE
TAKING OUR HEARTS AND VOICES TO THE NEXT LEVEL

By Mareha Azumi

Coming back from the JACL Convention in San Jose this month, I am filled with so many feelings: gratitude, increased passion to raise awareness about what Asian Pacific Islanders (API) and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender (LGBT) families experience, but most of all, I walked away as a mother with more hope in my heart for my children and our community.

First of all, I am so grateful to JACL National and all the people involved in choosing me as one of their 2014 Biennial honorees. When I look at those who have come before me and those who were also honored, I am overwhelmed and humbled to be listed with them. But without my family and so many others who have supported me, like Patricia Oschi, Bill Yoshikane, Stephanie Nitahara, Harold Kamaya, San Fernando and Seattle JACLs, I would still be sitting at home wondering how I could even begin this journey.

As I was meeting with one of the chapters, I realized how JACL has come full circle to connect with my advocacy. Years ago, when my parents invested their hard-earned money, they gave each of their children a portion of the compensation. I spent my portion on the adoption of my daughter, who today is my son. In some ways, Aiden is a JACL baby. As people like Graycee Ufahana have made it possible for me to have Aiden in my life, JACL continues to make sure that the life he has will not be threatened by those who fear his Japanese heritage and/or the fact that he is transgender. Thank you to all the JACL individuals who have been doing this work to further equality for both my straight son and my transgender son.

I also feel that this conference has elevated my passion and strengthened my determination to create a more accepting world. I am renewed by the number of young people who are taking up the torch of advocacy. I am strengthened by the number of people who have been part of this work and have dedicated their life to civil rights.

But mainly, I am inspired by the people who shared stories or texts with me. One gray-haired lady approached me after our presentation on Nikkei LGBTQ Justice, and as she spoke words of appreciation, tears trickled down her face. I have no idea where these tears came from... was she part of the LGBT community and afraid of being ostracized all these years? Did she have children of family members who hid in shame but could possibly feel free to be themselves now? Or was she just moved by the work we are doing? I may never know... but her tears are a part of me now...

I am also inspired by a young lady who walked up to me and shared how thrilled she was to see that LGBT issues are being brought more to the forefront of JACL’s work.

FOR THE RECORD

WHOSE LEGACY IS IT ANYWAY?

By John Ikari

In the years after the war, the word “Napu” was not yet part of the Japanese American lexicon, although we were familiar enough with kids our age who were from mixed-race marriages, usually those of Japanese war brides.

We didn’t treat them well. We sanctified these kids of our brides. We viewed mixed-race marriages—Japanese female, white male—as somehow less than our sensibilities as Japanese. It set our equilibrium off balance. I’m sure it had everything to do with the fact that whites were the ones who abused us and did so much to take away our humanity.

What I have come to understand later as I reflected on that time in our lives was that we didn’t know how to relate to Japanese American kids who came from mixed marriages because it was our own discomfort that caused us not to try to befriended any of them. Unlike whites, who seemed to look down on these kids as social outcasts, we didn’t view them as inferior in any way but simply didn’t know how to relate to them.

Sadly, children from those marriages suffered from discrimination on all sides. Biracial kids, as they were called, were shunned by whites and by us. They never joined in the fun with us wherever we were, probably because we never made them feel welcomed to join us.

The image in my mind that captures all of that was a time when we had a church picnic at Saratoga Beach, with our families all gathered on blankets and towels. But we were busy with our own little people and didn’t have a lot of time to share our blanket, let alone the kids join, we could never get comfortable with each other.

All that has changed. Mixed-marriage students have become more common among Japanese Americans, even to the degree that some in our community are concerned with the disappearance of pure “Japanese American.”

The question about “purity” troubles me because it expresses an underlying judgment that implies something less than 100 percent Japanese threatens the racial integrity of our American communities. It’s a judgment that states that if your racial lineage goes back to Japan, on both sides of your family, your cultural legitimacy as a Japanese is somehow superior to someone who may have half or a quarter or an eighth Japanese blood.

But you and I know that isn’t true. I know Sansei who care no more about preserving their Japanese cultural heritage than do their non-Japanese partners. And that’s fine. To each his own. I certainly don’t judge that because it isn’t something that concerns me, and besides, it’s none of my business.

Preserving our cultural heritage and legacy is one thing, but judging who is best qualified to preserve it is quite another. It goes back to the question I asked before, “What does it mean to be Japanese American?” Language? I hope not. These kids, we all know, have so few of us speak Japanese. The way we look? Racial features? Yes, mostly, but that’s not all. I think it has to do with cultural values we inherit from our parents and community. Values inform behavior, right? We understand mono or genron or kanashin, etc., all those things we learn from our parents soon after birth.

Last month, I spent a few days with college-age students who were in California as participants of the Chicago chapter’s Kanucha Program. They were in little Tokyo to experience and learn about the Japanese American legacy, and then they visited Manzanar on an overnight trip.

NATIONAL PRESIDENT'S REPORT
National President David Lin during his opening remarks at the 2014 National Council Meeting.

SECRETARY/TREASURER'S REPORT
The first that we ended the year with a $52,000 surplus is a huge accomplishment. We hope to sustain the fiscal discipline to sustain a positive net position year over year,” said Secretary/Treasurer Mathew Parellas. In addition, the organization’s investment policy statement underwent important reforms to position our endowment and scholarship funds to sustain the expected return, given our level of risk,” and a fund development director was authorized for the purpose of raising more revenue for the organization. JACIL also gained $48,000 in membership fees for 2014, and Parellas added, “There is no intention to raise dues in the next biennium.” The 2015-16 budget was approved.

However, on a positive note, “we do have since the beginning of this year a bout 280 new members, and I think this is a positive sign for us,” said VP of Membership Yoshi Abe. In the coming months, Abe and new Membership Coordinator for the west coast will be conducting a series of webinars to listen to JACIL members and share ideas that will positively grow JACIL’s num bers.

PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT REPORT
I continue to work with the President’s Council, our Executive Director, the Board President and Secretary/Treasurer to develop a long- and mid-range fund development strategy,” said VP for Planning and Development Chip Larosche.

YOUTH PERSPECTIVE

A MESSAGE FROM THE NY/SC

By Nicole Horuchi Gaddie

My name is Nicole Horuchi Gaddie, and I am honored to represent the JAACL as the newly elected National Youth Student Council Chair. When I was in high school, my District Governor, Janette Misaka, reached out to me and urged me to enter the National Contestion competition.

I won the local and regional competition and was flown to the Chicago convention to compete nationally. The theme of the competition was modeled after President Obama’s theme of “Creating Change.”

I spoke about how Asian Americans could combat stereotypes and how important it was to connect with high schools and colleges to incorporate youth. I won the competition, and my prize was an all-expense paid trip to Japan. In just a few short months, I had experienced all levels of the JAACL. I was welcomed into the organization’s community, and the height of my values and learned how the governing process worked.

When I visited Japan, I was welcomed by JAACL JAP President John J. Later, when I moved from Salt Lake City to Seattle for college, I was once again welcomed, this time by District Governor Sheldon Arabaki. The mentorship and guidance of these members urged me to accept the position of Pacific Northwest Youth Rep on the NY/SC and later run for Chair.

For those of you that are unaware, the National Youth/Student Council (NY/SC) represents local JAACL youth members, including students and young professionals, at the national level of the organization. The NY/SC consists of representatives from each of JAACL’s seven districts, as well as four at-large members. District youth/student representatives serve as the primary link between the NY/SC and youth in local JAACL chapters and on college campuses.

As youth, we are united through our past and supported by our present community as we work endlessly to create a more just and humane world for the future.

On July 1st, over 60 youth members gathered in San Jose for the 45th annual National Convention. We discussed problems of inequality and the national stereotypes that continue to isolate our media and society. However, despite the challenges Asian Americans face, we as youth also brought a new energy and perspective to the discussion topics.

The Youth Opening Session provided a time to learn about the themes youth are passionate about. These included the environment, LGBTQ issues, women’s rights, and creating a space to discuss local grievances and controversies. The youth representatives were able to expand on these topics throughout convention, with the goal of returning to their campuses and communities with a feeling of empowerment.

Serving as the NY/SC Chair is a very special privilege for me, and I plan to channel the youth’s voice as much as possible to the National Council. I also plan to create an additional membership category for young adults that will fall between youth and adult members. My goal for the Youth Council is simple: increase the youth presence within the JAACL. Promoting a culture of cultural preservation, youth are enthusiastic to contribute.

I want to thank everyone who helped our youth representatives attend convention this year. Older JAACL members are essential in guiding and sustaining our youth population. I look forward to a great two years as chair.

Please email me at ngaddie@jacl.org if you have questions or need any support.

WE ARE AMERICA

The JACL National Convention’s Sayonara Banquet remembers, honors and celebrates all those who have contributed to the great American narrative.

By Tiffany Ujiye
Assistant Editor

Building an America as good as our ideals defines the mission of the JACL, said JACL National Director Priscilla Ouchida in her opening speech at the 2014 National JACL Convention’s Sayonara Banquet on July 14 at the DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel in San Jose.

This year’s theme, titled “We Are America,” was a reflection of the diversity that exists within the Asian Pacific Islander community and the important role the community has in the nation’s socioeconomic future.

“We’ve been working a long time on civil rights,” Ouchida said, “and we’re getting closer to that American ideal, but we’re still work to be done. We are America, building an America as good as our ideals is a 365-day job. These people, all of you in this room, have incredible successes that have benefited all Americans. Together, we can still do more, and that is my challenge to all of us in this room.”

As the oldest and largest Asian civil rights organization in the United States, the JACL has been at the forefront of change. This year’s theme was specifically chosen by the 2014 National JACL Convention Committee and National Board to focus on awareness of diversity and inclusion as an integral part of the fabric of American society.

“The diversity of the Asian Pacific American community and the diversity of this country could be a real strength,” JACL National President David Lin said before honoring guests. “Our job and our obligation as the premier Asian American civil rights organization is to lead and frame that strength to better the lives of not only Japanese Americans but all Americans.”

Special recognition was given to those promoting change and diversity, including former U.S. Transportation Secretary Norm Mineta, Congressman Mike Honda, Congresswoman Doris Matsui, Alaska Native Togiak Togo, San Jose Assembly member Paul Song, San Jose City Council Member Sam Liccardo, Santa Clara County Board of Supervisors member Dave Cortese, Foster City Councilmember Steve Obamoto, San Jose City Manager Ed Shadish, Economic Development Manager of Santa Clara Ruth Shidzu, the Sano family of Sano Farms and renowned judo instructor Yuki Uchida.

Many of ceremonies Mike Inouye, an Emmy Award-winning TV news anchor, introduced special guests and humored the crowd in remembrance the nostalgic TV comedy “Cheers.”

“I’ve always wanted to do this, but if you could just shout that famous line to us: “Mineta.,” Inouye asked of Mineta.

“Hey, everybody! Mineta shouted.

“Norm!” the room responded with great laughter and applause.

Mineta served as Transportation Secretary in President George W. Bush’s Cabinet and Commerce Secretary during the last six months of President Bill Clinton’s term, in addition to previously serving as the mayor of San Jose, which received its international airport in Mineta’s honor in 2001.

Mineta said: “I am a proud son of the city of San Jose,” Mineta said, welcoming the 2014 National Convention. “San Jose JACL is proud to be hosting all of you for our 2014 convention. I appreciate that all of you have taken time out of your busy schedules to be here for a whole week to participate in various activities, taking on the work of the National JACL.”

The evening’s highest JACL award, the Ruby Pin, was given to David and Carol Kameyama for their exceptional service to the JACL and the Japanese American community for 41 and 57 years of service, respectively.

Kameyama exhibited unwavering dedication in furthering civil rights, social justice, youth development and cultural preservation that marked both of them as community treasures and a point of pride for the JACL.”

I would say that one of the things that impressed me most about the JACL has been the courage and commitment that you have brought out of the incubation experience to work for the rights and justice for all,” Pereira said. “To fight discrimination wherever you see it and to resist this work from such a principled organization is such an honor.”

Stewart Kwoh, founding president and executive director of Asian Americans Advancing Justice Los Angeles, was awarded the Edison Uno Civil Rights Award, recognizing the organization’s dedicated leadership in the field of civil rights.

The Japanese American National Museum’s Blanket Awards were given to Masahiro Azumi for his LGBTQ advocacy, Dale Minami for his civil rights activism, and involvement in the Red Korematsu conviction and Rob and PJ Hirabayshi for their cultural legacy in the Japanese American community. Each Blanket Award is presented to individuals with outstanding achievements in different fields of endeavor for their contributions to the sum of human knowledge and how they have enhanced the quality of life in American society.

The evening remembered, celebrated and honored all of those who have contributed and who are contributing to the American narrative, bringing color to the “We Are America” theme.
CELEBRATION TIME

The JACL Awards Luncheon honors Legacy Fund grant recipients, the George Inagaki Chapter Citizenship honoree and JACLeR’s of the Biennium.

By R.C. Staff

Legacy Fund grant recipients as well as the George Inagaki Chapter Citizenship and JACLer of the Biennium Award honorees were recognized for their legislative, civic, social and educational activities at the Annual Luncheon on July 12 before a warm crowd of special guests and members.

Program emcees George Kiriyama and Jana Katsuyama welcomed speakers Congressman Mike Honda and Secretary Norman Mineta in discussing the JACL’s future and past accomplishments. Special guests also included Judge Raymond Uno.

One of the things I want to encourage is for JACL to continue supporting fellows,” Honda said in his opening speech. It allows young people to experience and be open to what goes on in Congress. Incorporation happened, building up stereotypes over time, and we need to fight it. We need to ensure that what happened to us will never happen again and to say no to the things that we need to say no to.

Honda also thanked the JACL for its support in funding his current fellow, Kelly Honda, the Mike M. Masuda Legislative Fellow, as fellowships allow youth members to gain political and legislative experience needed to become future leaders.

Mineta installed the new JACL National cabinet for the next biennium, congratulating David Lin, Matthew Borrells, Jeffrey Moy, Chip Lucey, Toshi Abe, Nicole Horiuchi Goudie and Michelle Yamasato on their new positions. JACL National President David Lin presented the JACLer of the Biennium Award to Lawson Sakai, a veteran of the 442nd Regimental Combat Team. Sakai, a highly decorated war hero, volunteered for the 442nd RCT while incarcerated in Colorado. He received two Bronze Star medals and four Purple Heart medals, as well as the Congressional Gold Medal for his service and valor. Each year, Sakai visits hundreds of students at all levels, church organizations, civic groups and retired military organizations about his experiences and lessons learned during his service.

“I’m just another Nisei JACLer — all of you could deserve this award,” Sakai said, discussing how such a recognition was a tribute to the other men who had fallen during the war to protect their country. Over 500 Nisei boys lost their lives, killed in action. But because of that, today we have what we have. Please do not forget them.

The second JACLer Biennium Award was given to Grant Ujifusa, legislative strategy chair of JACL’s Legislative Education Committee. His work was critical in convincing the first Bush administration to agree to grant the “Manzanar” Daniel Inouye’s proposal to make redress payments and entitlement to all those who were wrongfully interned during World War II. As the founding editor of “The Almanac of American Politics,” Ujifusa remains relevant in today’s political landscape. Among his other numerous honors is the Order of the Rising Sun Award from the Japanese government.

Ujifusa was unable to attend the Awards Luncheon due to a long standing family obligation, but he gave thanks to the National Convention and celebrated the lifelong accomplishments of longtime JACLer Goyce Uyehara, who passed away in June, in his acceptance speech.

I am greatly honored by the award I received today,” Mas Hashimoto read on Ujifusa’s behalf. It would like to accept it in the memory of Sparky Matsunaga, Cherry Kinchita, Dewey Tahara, Mike Masuda and Goyce Uyehara.

The George Inagaki Chapter Citizenship Award was given to JACL’s Seattle Chapter.

The most impressive accomplishment of the Seattle chapter is their staunch commitment to the youth,” said Venice Culver-JACL Chapter President Steven Sharp.

Congressman Mike Honda spoke about the importance of youth membership and participation in the JACL.

This Year’s Legacy Fund Grant Recipients Include:
- Chicago Chapter: The Kinzoku Project
- Mile High Chapter: The Medal of Freedom Campaign
- NCW/DC District: Japanese Culture Activity Book
- New Mexico Chapter: “Confinement in the Land of Enchantment: Japanese Americans in New Mexico During World War II (CLOSE)
- NY/BSC: 2014 Youth Delegate Campaign
- Philadelphia Chapter: Biography of Kiyoshi Kurumaya
- Philadelphia Chapter: Youth Sponsorship
- Seattle Chapter: Develop an API Support Group for APILO/ET Youth and Their Families
- Snake River Chapter: Russell Lee in the Pacific Northwest: Documenting Japanese American Farm Labor Camps

The Legacy Fund started a few years after the passage of the Civil Liberties Act of 1988, giving financial support to the Japanese American community in research and education to prevent future injustices. Earnings from this endowment are used to grant funds up to $3,000 for projects that implement JACL’s mission. All of the programs listed have shown and will continue the legacy of patriotism and the fight to improve civil rights.

“To a lot of young people here, I think it’s easy for us to just go along on a rut and think of things as being in the past,” Katsuyama said in her closing remarks. “But I think of one of the things I’ve learned from JACL and from the people who are here is that there is a daily fight, a daily vigil that all of us are called upon.”

The 2014 Youth Attendees at JACL National Convention
NIKKIEI LGBTQ INITIATIVE WORKS TO FORM AN INCLUSIVE COMMUNITY

By Alysha Tsubi, contributor

A room full of people representing a wide variety of generations gathered for the LGBTQ Justice workshop on July 11 at the JACL National Convention. Bonnie Sugiura, director of the LGBTQ Center at San Jose State University, introduced the panel that consisted of educator, author and LGBTQ advocate Marshia Aizumi; Pacific Southwest District Program Coordinator Travis Ishigo; and PSW Regional Director Stephanie Nishinaka.

Sugiura said that the goals of the workshop were to help participants gain awareness and understanding of how to create an inclusive community within the JACL, as well as to empower chapter and district representatives to expand injustice work in their own communities.

The meeting began with “Terminology 101,” led by Nishinaka, in which the words lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, agender and queer were defined. Although a relied upon throughout the beginning of the session, Ms. Nishinaka explained the terms, participants began raising questions that gave way to clarifications.

Ishigo stepped up to hash out the difference between gender identity and sex identity using a diagram called the “Genderbread Person” as a visual aid.

“It’s not necessarily how other people see you, but it’s how you see yourself,” said Ishigo. “And everybody has the freedom to define their own gender.”

The Genderbread Person displayed a tray of graphs concerning gender identity, gender expression, biological sex and attraction to Ishigo went on to point out that there are no ties between gender and sex identity. She said, like the chart, the definitions of gender and sex are fluid — a scale that slides according to an individual.

Then, Aizumi rose to provide information about the LGBTQ advocacy work that has been accomplished through the JACL. But first, she shared her personal story about her experience being the mother of her transgender son, Aiden Aizumi.

“When I was in elementary school,” Aizumi said of her life, “I was a girl with masculine tendencies,” and that she and her husband thought Aiden was simply a tomboy. However, in middle school, Aizumi said there were many challenging situations and incidents.

Transgendering into high school, Aiden developed panic attacks and started to withdraw and become depressed. She came out as a lesbian as a sophomore.

“We thought it was going to get better, and it got worse,” said Aizumi. She describes harassment and bullying, which overwhelmed her to the point where she had to leave high school by studying from home.

Aizumi said that after turning 17, Aiden told her, “I’m not a lesbian, I’m a boy.” Her family, including her husband, spent 2009 transitioning their daughter to their son.

Reflecting on the experience brought tears to Aizumi’s eyes as she revealed how challenging it was, but this story has a happy ending.

“Since then he has found his place... he really has,” said Aizumi. He has been able to come out as an individual, not only just be his true self, but really his heart has been able to open up and he has immersed himself in the community.

Together, Aiden and his mother have written a book published two years ago, "Two Spirits, One Heart: A Mother, Her Transgender Son, and Their Journey to Love and Acceptance." They’ve also matched in panels, held workshops and shared their story via public speaking engagements.

Aizumi’s website (marshiaaizumi.com) features an endorsement from George Takei, “... gender identity is a reality discussed in many Asian American communities. I recommend their co-written memoir "Two Spirits, One Heart.""

Following her family’s story, Aizumi dove into the next portion of the workshop to discuss LGBTQ justice in relation to the JACL. She highlighted the advocacy in the San Gabriel Valley, Seattle, Chicago, New York, Washington, D.C., and the Midwest. The workshop capped off with small group discussions, separating into three groups led by Nishinaka, Ishigo and Aizumi.

The San Gabriel Valley Asian Pacific Islander PFLAG (Parents, Families, and Friends of Lesbians and Gays) chapter is one of the most active in LGBTQ work. It has monthly meetings along with two different methods to provide community with support and education.

One of those mechanisms is the family circles, in which PFLAG facilitates conversation to build bridges between family members in a positive and private way, according to the SGPAPI PFLAG website. The other is afternoons teas, which are culturally arranged meetings where attendees can openly discuss LGBTQ issues over tea and snacks.

The group covers a multitude of dialects, including Chinese, Hindi, Japanese, Korean, Punjabi, Tagalog, Thai and Vietnamese.

The Pacific Southwest office generated another fresh major justice group: the Nikkei LGBTQ justice team. The Initiative’s vision is to establish a thriving Nikkei community that is actively inclusive and safe,” by organizing educational programming through events.

Thus far, two events have taken place in March and May of 2014 prior to the JACL conference workshop. The second was hosted at Centennial United Methodist Church and even featured United Methodist Bishop Royal Scoe as a speaker.

The new Nikkei LGBTQ gathering is called “Olurii,” which means “welcome home.” It is set to take place at the Japanese American National Museum on Nov. 15 from 8-30 a.m.-4 p.m. — the longest event to date — and will feature educational and storytelling workshops, according to judging.

Aizumi said that attendance numbers nearly doubled from the first event to the second.

Despite the positive reports from the LGBTQ Justice workshop, a couple attended posing sobbing questions at the tail end of the presentation portion.

One gentleman inquired about the extent of lack of public acceptance of the LGBTQ community. He said he encountered some opposing LGBTQ views at a recent funeral and that it surprised him a great deal. Another man asked a question about what the panel’s experience was co-sponsoring events with Christian churches.

In regards to public understanding of the LGBTQ community, Aizumi said, “I think it’s evolving... there’s more understanding.” At the beginning of the workshop, the panel noted the title of the session highlighted, LGBTQ Justice in the Nikkei Community: There’s Work to be Done.

In terms of meeting with churches, Ishigo said that it is extremely important on the climate of the congregation because they don’t want to cause issues by forcing their views upon anyone. She said that they’ve had to hold off organizing an event at a church before as we cause unwanted problems.

Although Aizumi added that she is extremely appreciative of some churches since her transgender son, Aiden, was asked to leave their church.

“When you are struggling, you hope you have a spiritual support, and you’re asked to leave a church — that’s very difficult,” said Aizumi. “So, when I see churches today trying to understand and help their church be more inclusive, I’m just so grateful for that work.”

The purpose of Olurii is to make the Japanese American community in Southern California a home for the whole community,” said Nishinaka. “This is one of the baby steps.”

Registration for Olurii is open at www.olurii-los.org.
FUN IN THE SUN
Locals gather at the beach in the name of fun and family at the San Diego JACL’s annual picnic.

By Genie Lee A. Suzuki, contributor

The 2014 San Diego JACL’s annual picnic wasn’t a typical American picnic. Rather, it featured geisha shoes, tea bags and Top Ramen for nachos, as well as free shave ice at East Crown Point Shores on June 29. Perhaps more importantly, it gave attendees an opportunity to reconnect.

Last year, the picnic was a much more scaled-down event as the San Diego JACL took a one-year hiatus in its official hosting duties. This year, the chapter, in trying to bring back the family fun, knew just the man to make it happen.

Annual picnic chairperson Robert Ito, a second-generation JACL member, has been going to the picnic since he was a toddler. He has a photo that was taken when he was about 3 years old at the Silver Strand, said Ito, 63. “It’s been a community tradition for at least 60 years.”

Despite attending the picnic for six decades, this was the first year Ito served as chair. He has always helped out for as long as I can remember by doing whatever needed to be done,” he said. Driving the box truck the day before the picnic to pick up the water and soda, the prizes, the canopies, trash cans and anything else that needed to be taken to the picnic. Then the day of the picnic, Ito has always driven the truck down to the picnic at 5 a.m. to make sure we get our setup set up. Set up and breakdown, has always been my job.”

As chair, Ito’s goal was to make the chair-friendly atmosphere that he enjoyed as a little boy. “As a 3-year-old at my first JACL picnic in the ‘50s, I had fun. This year, we focused on having things that would be fun for a child under 5 years old. The first-time-ever face painter and inflatable bounce house were a huge success,” Ito said.

San Diego native Ito relied on members of his family and close friends to help him pull off the large-scale event. His cousin, Andy Kobayashi, ran the opportunity drawing, which was comprised of numerous gift baskets crafted by paint; attendees were drawn for each of the baskets, which varied in size and value. There were also prizes for those of the most popular baskets, with first place getting a wine-tasting gift certificate for up to 12 people.

Although there were some new things at the picnic, much of the tried and true was preserved. Well, we’re still at the beach, but you don’t see the waves and we don’t have the pesky fishing contest. We also had the annual get-together to now annual picnic tradition,” Ito said. “There’s been changes, sure, but what hasn’t changed is that it’s still fun for families and the kids.”

San Diego JACL president Michael Kutima said he is grateful to Ito and his committee for successfully organizing this year’s picnic. It was wonderful to see the families and members of our Japanese American community come together once again for the annual picnic,” said Kutima. For the JACL, it was an opportunity for the community to come together and celebrate in a fun atmosphere.

This year’s picnic was held at East Crown Point Shores.

TRIBUTE

WILLIAM ‘BILL’ YOSHIO HIROSE

William "Bill" Yoshio Hirose, born June 4, 1929, died peacefully, surrounded by his family, at home in El Cerrito on May 26, 2014. He was the youngest brother of George Hirose, Jack Hirose, Frank Hirose and Motoko Kanazawa. Bill grew up in the Mission District of San Francisco. During World War II, his family was sent to the Topaz Internment Camp in Utah. Upon returning to San Francisco, Bill attended Mission High School, City College of San Francisco and the University of California at Berkeley, where he played on the lightweight basketball team. In 1951, Bill graduated from U.C. Berkeley. After serving in the U.S. Marine Corps, he attended Boalt Hall Law School. He received his J.D. and was admitted to the California State Bar in 1957. In 1959, he became a Certified Public Accountant. He formed an accounting partnership that led to the practice named Hirose & Hirose and later moved his practice to Oakland, where the Hirose & Oto firm, later known as H.O.B., was formed. In 1986, he was admitted to the United States Tax Court, and in 1987, received a Certificate of Educational Achievement in the area of Personal Financial Planning. After retiring from accounting in 1995, he was Of Counsel with the law offices of Minami Law and Tamaki, where he enjoyed the vim and vigor of the young attorneys. Bill was an avid fan of the Warriors, 49ers and the Giants. He dedicated countless hours volunteering as a coach to youth basketball and tirelessly supporting numerous nonprofit organizations. He knew how to celebrate any occasion on any day — planning the unexpected, orchestrating surprises and finding fun and unique ways to enjoy life and family.

Bill was survived by his wife of 52 years, May (formerly Ouma), and four children, Paul, Nora, Ruth and Anna. He was the loving Bapa to his eight grandchildren: Bryce, Sierra, Gabriella, Matthew, Marcus, Jonathan, Lucas and Bella.

He will be deeply missed by his family and friends. A memorial service was held on June 14 at Sunset View Cemetery in El Cerrito. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Always Dream Foundation at 125 Railroad Ave, Suite 203. EDUCATION MATTERS

PRESEVING THE FUTURE BY PREPARING TODAY

Like with so many JAACL chapters, the Livingston-Merced Chapter (Central California) relied on the Nisei to respond to requests from schools and organizations to share their first-hand “experience about the forced removal and incarceration of Japanese Americans in the ‘relocation’ camps, but with the passage of time, that number has declined.

In an effort to recruit Sauses and Yonas to continue on with the work they have been doing for the past 20 years, the Livingston-Merced Chapter’s Education Component was fortunate to have the Sonoma County JAACL’s Jodi Hotelz and Cynthia Kishi describe some of their organizational tools and show their PowerPoint presentations that were developed for their chapter’s Speakers Bureau. Hotelz generously gave materials that her chapter created over the years so that the Livingston-Merced Chapter would not have to reinvent the wheel.

After the initial meeting, the Education Component had a small core of potential participants. Their next step will be to create a common presentation that any speaker can use going forward. Once the curriculum is prepared, they hope it will encourage retired and/or re-engaged Daniel and others to join the chapter’s Speakers Bureau, as it is an important tool to educate both young and old about U.S. history and the importance of safeguarding our civil rights.

Throughout a three-day period recently, more than 230 third- to eighth-grade students were the beneficiaries of “bus grants” made available to the local schools courtesy of the Education Component of the Livingston-Merced JAACL. The students visited the Merced Assembly Center Memorial at the Merced County Fairgrounds and, with the assistance of 14 volunteer docents who also answered questions posed by the young students, made rubbings of names on the Wall of Names while others read the names of the camps on the benches; the students then were able to go to the map to see the actual location of these places.

The Merced Assembly Center Memorial is currently in Phase II, with plans to have a mural on the back of the Wall of Names of those who were held there. A garden is included in Phase II, but it is currently on hold due to a site-wide requirement regarding water consumption limits on fairground landscapes during the current drought. The Education Component hopes to continue and improve upon this successful school program next year.

Perhaps now, she and her sibling will not face a wall of silence from their family but will be openly embraced because a respected organization continues to voice their LGBT support.

But the strongest emotion I felt with the Convention was hope. I felt hope when people made references to the LGBT community, like the executive director talking about her LGBT child and former Secretary of Transportation. Norman Mineta making positive statements about marriage equality. I was hopeful when Congressman Mike Honda shared with me his connection to PFLAG, a national organization that supports, educates and advocates for LGBT individuals and their families. When I talked with chapters who want to do more to send a message of support and acceptance to their LGBT families, my heart filled with hope. One chapter leader said, “We have to do more.”

I am home now, thinking about all I have learned, all the wonderful people I have met and all I want to do in the future. JAACL will be part of my future. I am certain of that. Both conversations that have stayed with me since the Convention are these: Our world is about the humanity we share, and our work is about families and love. Humanity, family and love, could there be any greater purpose to what we are doing?

Makala Aji was an advocate in the LGBT community and the author of the book “Two Spirits, One Heart: A Mother, Her Transgender Son and Their Journey to Love and Acceptance.”

Six of the 10 participants were hapa with a variety of mixes: Irish, Norwegian, Lebanese, Swedish, German and more, and, of course, Japanese. The one thing the participants had in common — whether they were full Japanese or mixed-race — was their search for identity as Japanese Americans, something they shared equally.

I was deeply moved when I listened in one workshop session to the participants describe how they each had to struggle with identity issues and how acceptance and rejection have been such a part of their lives. Living in areas where there are no large populations of Japanese Americans like on the West Coast has made their personal quests much more difficult and even painful.

You would think being in California where multiraciality is not at all uncommon these days among younger Asians and certainly among the Yonsei would afford the Kanaka participants the opportunity to be totally free of the very notion of identity.

Unfortunately, that wasn’t the case. On one of the tours in Little Tokyo, a guide apparently questioned the legitimacy of one of the participants identifying as Japanese. I was a child when I learned about this the next day, knowing how painful it must have been to be the brunt of this kind of non-considered ignorance.

It’s a reminder of how important it is for us to remember that hapa youth who identify as Japanese American embrace their Japanese heritage as much as (and maybe even more than) the rest of us do. We take it for granted, while they cherish the part of their identity.

This year’s Kanaka group was a welcome, each and every one of them. On the flight back to San Francisco, I thought about them and thought, if they are our future and the bearers of our legacy into the future, our legacy will be more than just fine in their hands.
