SEI FUJII’S FINAL LEGAL VICTORY

Now 63 years after his death, Fujii is finally granted a California law license.

The California Supreme Court voted unanimously to grant Fujii posthumous membership in the State Bar of California. Fujii died in 1953. The Little Tokyo Historical Society and the Japanese American Citizens League (JACL) joined forces to take the motion to the high court to honor Fujii’s life and legacy.

In a statement, the high court said, "A Rebel’s Outcry," which will be released this year, stars Chris Tashima as Fujii. Chin, who directed “Report,” is also finishing work on an official English biography of Fujii, “A Rebel’s Outcry,” which will be released later this year.

In 2013, a galvanized steel monument to honor Fujii’s life and legacy was permanently erected in Little Tokyo at the former site of the Kasulu Mainichi, a Japanese daily newspaper for which Fujii served as its publisher. The monument, located on Second Street at the entrance to the Japanese Village Plaza, was designed by Miles Endo of Studio Endo.

LEGAL-EASE: AN ATTORNEY’S PERSPECTIVE

ESTATE PLANNING FROM A-Z: A GLOSSARY, PART I

By Staci Yamashita-Iida

When I was in law school, my professors told me that learning the law is like learning a new language. Most contracts and legal documents are inundated with legalese: formal, technical legal language. In the beginning, I remember how difficult it was to decipher the foreign terms. In fact, it was that feeling of confusion that prompted me to begin writing this column. I wanted to take legalese and explain it simply and clearly — thus, “Legal-Ease.”

This article seeks to do just that with Estate Planning terminology. While it is not intended to be a comprehensive list, it does touch upon some of the basic key terms that appear within a typical Estate Plan.

Advance Healthcare Directive (AHCED): Also known as a Power of Attorney for Healthcare, an AHCED states your preferences, wishes and instructions regarding your medical care in the event of your incapacity. It also allows you to appoint a trusted individual to carry out these decisions on your behalf.

Beneficiaries: Through a living trust or will, you can designate beneficiaries who will receive your assets upon your passing. Beneficiaries can be an individual or group of individuals. It can also be a church, charity or organization.

Capacity: Testamentary capacity is the legal term used to describe an individual’s ability to create or alter a living trust or will. Capacity refers to one’s mental competency, rather than physical capability. If you do not have capacity (e.g., if you are in a coma), then you cannot make changes to your Estate Plan.

Durable Power of Attorney for Asset Management (DPOA): Also known as a Durable Power of Attorney for Finances, a DPOA allows another individual or entity to manage your financial affairs on your behalf. You have the option to choose the type of authority that is granted (full or limited), as well as whether the DPOA comes into effect immediately or upon incapacity.

Estate Tax Exclusion: The federal estate tax is a tax imposed on assets transferred at death. Most Americans do not have to worry about this particular tax because, as of 2017, each individual has an exemption of $5.49 million. Meaning if your estate is valued at less than $5.49 million at the time of your death, then it is unlikely that any estate taxes will be owed.

Funding: This is the process of transferring your assets into your living trust. For example, real property and bank accounts are generally “funded” into the trust, resulting in the assets being titled in the trust’s name.

Gift Tax Exclusion: As of 2017, the IRS allows you to gift up to $14,000 per person per year without paying a gift tax. Generally, any gift above $14,000 is taxable, but there are some exceptions (e.g., education, medical expenses, gifts to a spouse, gifts to political organizations for its use, etc.).

Heirs: If you die without a will or trust, then your assets will pass through probate to your heirs. There is a predetermined order for who your heirs are, which can be found in the California Probate Code. Heirs are contrasted with beneficiaries. You choose your beneficiaries; heirs are chosen for you.

Irrevocable Trust: By definition, irrevocable trusts cannot be amended or terminated. The written terms of the agreement are pretty much set in stone once created, except under specific circumstances. A majority of the “typical” trusts are not irrevocable — they are revocable, which allows more flexibility with modification and revocation.

Joint Tenancy: A common way to take title to real property. One characteristic is the right of survivorship. Meaning if one joint tenant dies, the property is automatically conveyed to the surviving joint tenant(s). Generally speaking, if you are married and have a living trust, title is typically changed from joint tenancy to the trustee of the trust.

Life Estate: A life estate occurs when a person has a legal right to use and live in a property for his or her lifetime, but does not actually own the property. After this “life tenant” dies, the property passes to named beneficiaries, called the “remaindermen.”

Minor: In California, any person under the age of 18 is considered a minor. In terms of Estate Planning, you cannot appoint a minor as your Power of Attorney or Successor Trustee but you can designate a minor as your beneficiary. There may be special administrative provisions regarding the minor’s inheritance.

Part II will be continued in my next column. Stay tuned!

LEGAL-EASE: AN ATTORNEY’S PERSPECTIVE

FINDING TRUTH THAT WITHSTANDS THE WEATHER OF TIME

By Matthew Ormseth

At the paper where I just started working it’s something of an intern initiatory rite to cover high school graduations. And on any given night this past week or in the weeks to come, there will be at least a half-dozen graduations in the city.

I’ve heard plenty of graduation speeches in the past few days — from principals, teachers, valedictorians, guest speakers. They all bleed into the same anodyne sermonizing, stupefied by the redundancy of what was being told to me. I remember being that graduate with eyes glazed over, indiscernible indifference. Even prefacing a corny exhortation with, “I know it’s cliche, but...” has become a cliché.

Expressing emotion is cliché. Giving advice is cliché. Being candid is cliché. And it is strange that we would discount the heirlooms of centuries of communal storytelling — timeless lessons found in our holy books and fables and mythologies — simply because we have not found new ways of saying what others before us learned and passed down to us.

Just because I have yet to find a new way of saying, “Every end is also a new beginning,” doesn’t make it untrue. That was a platitude leveled at us at my own high school graduation, but it’s true. It is undeniably true. And it’s helped me through many a failure in the past four years.

At the heart of every cliche is a truth that has weathered the test of time; a saying is only cliche because we have heard it so many times, and we have only heard it so many times because it means something to so many people. And that, I think, is no reason for cynicism.

WASHINGTON, D.C.: MORE TO DO THAN JUST A CONVENTION

By David Inoue

In addition to being the host city of the 2017 JACL National Convention, Washington, D.C., is the home to many interesting and historical attractions. The convention will be offering special guided tours of two cultural attractions special to our Japanese American community.

The Japanese American Memorial to Patriotism During World War II can be found in the shadow of the U.S. Capitol dome. This serene memorial honors the service of Japanese American soldiers and recognizes the thousands incarcerated during the war. A tour will be offered in the morning and afternoon.

Although you will have the opportunity to view the special exhibit “Righting a Wrong: Japanese Americans and World War II” at the Smithsonian reception on July 6, there will be a docent-led tour of the exhibit on July 9 at 2 p.m. While both activities are FREE, registration is required.

In addition, the Smithsonian Sackler Gallery is currently featuring the exhibit “Inventing Utamaro: A Japanese Masterpiece Rediscovered” that showcases a three-painting set by Utamaro that has not been exhibited as a complete set in 140 years. The exhibit ends on July 9.

Just a few blocks north of our convention hotel, the Omni Shoreham Hotel, is the Smithsonian’s National Zoo. In less than a 15-minute walk, you can find yourself on the Asia Trail viewing the giant pandas Mei Xiang, Tian Tian, and Bei Bei.

Admission is free to all Smithsonian facilities.

Finally, what better way to close out the convention than a trip to the ballpark. With a view of the Capitol dome from many seats in the park, you can watch the hometown Nationals host the Atlanta Braves. Games on July 9 at Nats Park feature “Kids Run the Bases,” allowing children ages 4-12 to go on the field immediately after the game to run the bases.

These are just a few of the things Washington, D.C., has to offer. The historic city is home to many more museums and distinct neighborhoods that are well worth exploring. And when you find the need to refuel after experiencing all of the sites, remember that Bon Appétit magazine named Washington, D.C., the 2016 Restaurant City of the Year. We hope that you will enjoy this city that we call home.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Park Service announced $1.6 million in grants on June 8 to fund preservation, restoration and education projects at several Japanese American confinement sites. The 14 grantees in four states and the District of Columbia will tell the story of the more than 120,000 Japanese Americans who were imprisoned by the U.S. government following the Dec. 7, 1941, attack on Pearl Harbor by Japan.

“The incarceration of Japanese Americans during World War II is a painful episode in U.S. history, but one that future generations must remember and learn from,” National Park Service Acting Director Michael T. Reynolds said. “The National Park Service has an important role in telling this story through our stewardship of sites like Honouliuli, Manzanar, Minidoka and Tule Lake. We provide communities and partner organizations through the National Park Service Japanese American Confinement Sites Grant Program.”

Congress established the JACS grant program in 2006, authorizing a total of $38 million in funding for the life of the program. The June 8 announcement brings the current award total to more than $22 million.

Using grant funds, the National Japanese American Memorial Foundation will enlist the help of high school students to develop video apps that will provide visitors to the Japanese American Memorial to Patriotism in WWII with a deeper understanding of the incarceration sites commemorated by the memorial.

The Japanese American National Museum will use grant money to conserve more than 100 artifacts from the collection of Allen Hendershot Eaton, a folk art expert who acquired artwork created by incarcerees, which the museum will share as part of a traveling exhibition.

The program’s mission is to teach future generations about the injustice of the World War II confinement of Japanese Americans and inspire commitment to equal justice under the law.

Successful proposals require applicants to match the grant award with $1 in non-federal funds or “in-kind” contributions for every $2 they receive in federal money.

PICKLED MACKEREL? YOU BET

Building upon the nostalgia of his grandmother's cooking, James Beard-nominated rising chef Brady Williams embraces the old and the new as head chef at Canlis.

By Kristen Taketa, Contributer

Here is Brady Williams’ cooking philosophy in a nutshell: Put only a few high-quality ingredients on the plate and “just try to not mess it up.”

Although Canlis, the award-winning Seattle restaurant that Williams leads, features American food — specifically of the Pacific Northwest persuasion — his way of thinking about food is ultimately Japanese. Williams’ way of cooking is to compose a dish using only what is necessary — to achieve a lot with a little.

“Japanese cuisine is achieving as much depth with as few ingredients as is possible,” Williams said. “You remove all the clutter, and only what is necessary remains.”

It’s a philosophy that Williams, who is partly ethnically Japanese, built off of the nostalgia of his grandmother’s Japanese cooking, especially eating katsu and pickled mackerel when he was young.

Two years ago, Williams scored the prestigious job as head chef of the Canlis restaurant in Seattle, likely because he embraced this disciplined way of cooking. The restaurant has a storied 66-year history and earned a prestigious James Beard Award for its wine program in early May. Williams himself was a finalist for the “rising Star Chef of the Year” James Beard Award, which identifies chefs under 30 who are “likely to make a significant impact on the industry in years to come.”

The restaurant is often almost fully booked a month in advance. Its setting, which offers glass-window views of Seattle, Lake Union and the Cascade mountain range, is often attended for special occasions, has a sport coat-level dress code and commands a $150, nine-course, chef’s choice tasting menu. A seven-wine pairing is $145.

But all of that doesn’t make running a restaurant an easy job, Williams says. Williams is one to admit that cooking is a profession that, while personally satisfying, has been glamorized by television. Even as a head chef, he gets to work by 11 in the morning, each day and often doesn’t return home until 1 a.m.

“You have to love being a chef because it’s a lot of hard work. The hours are really long, and it’s very demanding on you as a person and in relationships and friendships and all sorts of stuff,” Williams said. “But if you love it, there’s nothing greater than serving people and being able to create a meal for someone.”

Not Salad, But Mackerel

Japanese food was a staple in Williams’ home growing up. His mother grew up in Yokohama, and his grandparents also came from Japan. For a time, when Williams was young, he lived at his grandmother’s house. It was “always a treat” when she cooked Japanese food for him, he said.

“It was funny because I was really picky growing up,” he said. “I wouldn’t eat salad, but I would eat pickled mackerel. I’ve been eating that as long as I could remember.”

Williams got his start working in restaurants when he was young. His grandparents had bought an American diner in Seal Beach, Calif, and his mother managed the restaurant while he worked as a bus boy and helped with meal prep.

He hated it.

“It wasn’t for me,” Williams reflected now. “I didn’t enjoy it at all. But sometime in college, I started working for myself, and food just became a more integral part of my life. Before attending Dallas Baptist University, Williams had moved out of his home to play junior professional ice hockey. He played for four years and moved around the country before settling in Texas for school, after an injury essentially ended his hockey career.

“It was in college that he began viewing cooking as a desirable career alternative. He noticed that hockey and cooking had something in common: the amount of practice you put into each produces a logical, matching outcome of improvement.

“I call it measurable progress. You do something every day, you should be able to measure your progress,” he said. But it was simple family backyard barbecues and other meals shared by his family that drew Williams into cooking and convinced him to pursue it as his new vocation.

Even when there were hard times in his family, they still managed to congregate for a meal and appreciate each other’s company.

“I started thinking a little differently about food and the power of food to bring people together,” he said. “There’s a fellowship that would form around the table that wasn’t always there.”
Working From the Ground Up

Williams has never gone to cooking school. He could have attended, but he chose to defer enrollment before committing a lot of money to it. Instead, he educated himself by working as much as 19-hour workdays. He even worked without pay.

His first days as a cook were spent working an entry-level catering job from 5 a.m.-2 p.m., then a restaurant job from 3 p.m.-midnight each day. He spent whatever spare time he had reading whatever cookbooks were being released, such as “On Food and Cooking” by Harold Magee, “The French Laundry Cookbook” by Thomas Keller and “Joy of Cooking” by Irma Rombauer.

“All my free time was spent practicing cooking or reading about cooking or just immersing myself in cooking,” he said. “I was hungry.”

He ascended the ladder from working for free in entry-level jobs to working at higher-end restaurants, such as FT33 in Dallas, which focuses on hyperlocal cuisine. He left Dallas in 2012 for New York, working first at the pizza restaurant Roberta’s, then the two-Michelin star restaurant Blanca. Working at Blanca was the first time Williams worked with restaurant leadership that embraced a Japanese-like philosophy of cooking, the philosophy that would later drive his career to Canlis.

A Head Chef’s Job

About two years ago, he met folks who worked with Canlis through some mutual friends. They were looking for a new chef, but at first wrote off Williams, thinking he was too young. But about a month later, he got the invitation to a cooking audition for the head chef title at Canlis.

Unlike others trying for the job, Williams came to Seattle for the audition with nothing. He deliberately chose not to bring any prepared ingredients of his own, which many chef candidates typically do. Instead, he shopped around at local farmer’s markets to assemble his arsenal of ingredients.

The strategy worked in his favor, and the invitation to a cooking audition for the head chef title at Canlis.

Williams said of the Japanese influences on his cooking, “It’s really organized and starts with restaurant prep. At noon, he meets with his five sous chefs to talk about the menu and the guests they will be serving later that day. Williams then typically spends time in meetings, either with the restaurant owners or local farmers with whom he works. At 2 p.m., his staff of about 20 cooks arrives to prep, and then Williams spends as much time as possible in the kitchen. There’s a daily meeting at 3:45 with the kitchen staff, then a 4 p.m. “Family meal” when everybody shares a meal together. At 5 all staff gather for a final meeting before opening at 5:30. The last guests leave the restaurant around midnight, and Williams holds one more meeting at the end of the night to talk about the next day’s guests.

“We’re constantly trying to worry about tonight, but also we’re working on new dishes a month from now,” Williams said.

“There’s a lot of creative development, just a lot of prep work to get through the day. Then there’s the whole managerial side, taking care of your people and making sure your staff feels cared for.”

Japanese-Inspired Food

Canlis’ food is best summed up as “Pacific Northwest cuisine with a Japanese influence,” according to Williams. The restaurant has a history of Japanese inspiration — its founder, Peter Canlis, had run a restaurant in Oahu, Hawaii, with a Japanese staff before starting his namesake restaurant in Seattle 66 years ago, according to Seattle Met. Similar to Japanese restaurants, there was an intended emphasis on service and hospitality.

Today, the restaurant seeks out high-quality ingredients, many of which come from cultivated relationships with local farmers and producers, and Williams and his staff uses them to create clearly Japanese-inspired dishes. For example, the restaurant makes its own miso from local chickpeas and hazelnuts, and gomashio, similar to furikake, from the spruce of pine trees. The restaurant’s current menu offerings includes a steak tartare made with Wagyu beef, shima aji with a barley broth, asparagus poached in dashi and a Japanese-style cheesecake with buckwheat and shiso.

“It’s really just trying to find things that are interesting to us and then using what’s around us to kind of marry the two ideas,” Williams said.

Like in Japanese cuisine, the restaurant keeps food light and free from excess. For example, the restaurant uses dashi instead of chicken for the basis of its stocks, and it refrains from using dairy.

“It’s not very busy, it’s not very over the top elaborate,” Williams said. “It’s really focused and hopefully fairly intense.”

Even most of the restaurant’s plating is Japanese. Williams brings back ceramic plates from Japan himself. The restaurant also works with a Seattle-based potter from Hokkaido, Japan, to craft its own plates.

“It’s so ingrained, it is who I am, so it’s not like I’m appropriating something,” Williams said of the Japanese influence on his cooking and management. “It’s just how I think.”
JACL TO BE FEATURED ON ASIAN PACIFIC AMERICA

By P.C. Staff

In the U.S. today, there are few Asian American TV programs whose total focus is on the Asian American experience. NBC Bay Area’s “Asian Pacific America With Robert Handa” is unique in this regard and will be producing a program, set to air on Aug. 6 that will highlight all aspects of the Japanese American Citizens League.

“There are few local organizations that support and serve both cultural and community activism with senior and youth participation in this area. That is why this focus on the JACL is an ideal one for discussion on ‘Asian Pacific America With Robert Handa,’” said Lance Lew, NBC Bay Area’s coordinating producer for the show.

“While I was growing up, I always felt the JACL was an organization to serve the Japanese community, but it wasn’t until I became more active with the Emmi Uncle Temple that I truly understood its mission—to provide a voice for the Pan-Asian communities. We are members of the Sonoma County JACL, and my son, Spencer Lew, is currently its youngest board member,” Lew added. “The JACL’s goal is to build their legacy with younger members by giving them a voice to the conversation as they navigate the ever-evolving mission of the organization.”

The show will be comprised of four segments focusing on various activities of the JACL. JACL National President Gary Mayeda will be the program’s first guest.

“The JACL is honored to be featured in an upcoming episode of ‘Asian Pacific America With Robert Handa.’ With our national headquarters being in San Francisco, viewers will get to know more about our organization and what we strive for. The program will be very timely since we will have just completed our National Convention in Washington, D.C., in July,” Mayeda said.

To highlight what local chapters are doing in Northern California, Sonoma County Co-President Mark Hayashi will share its chapter activities.

“The Sonoma County Chapter of the JACL was organized in August of 1934. Today, we continue to expand our involvement in cultural, civil rights and community activities, as well as host a wide range of activities in addition to collaborating with other ethnic, civil and human rights organizations,” Hayashi said. “This will be a wonderful opportunity to share our activities with the program’s audience.”

Amelia Huster will be representing the new generation of JACL members.

“I am really lucky to be able to represent high school youth on the Berkeley JACL board as well as on this program. I am most interested in civil rights advocacy and learning about the JACL’s history of involvement and adding to it. There are so many bright, progressive young people that want their voices to be heard, and it’s critical to put them in places where they can do so effectively,” Huster said.

The final segment of the show will look at the 75th Anniversary of Executive Order 9066 by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. It will also highlight the JACL’s collaboration with the Smithsonian National Museum of American History’s “Righting a Wrong: Japanese Americans and World War II” exhibition in Washington, D.C., with guests Nancy Ukai and Patti Hirahara. The exhibit is set to run through February 2018.

“In October of 2016, the Berkeley JACL presented a ‘Talk Story and Treasures’ program, where we focused on Nihonuri artifacts that told tales about the Japanese American incarceration. This event helped raise funds for the current exhibition at the Smithsonian, ‘Righting a Wrong: Japanese Americans and World War II.’ In doing this program and seeing all the wonderful artifacts that people had preserved, I am now working on a new JACS (Japanese American Confinement Sites) grant project titled ‘50 Objects/50 Stories of the American Japanese Incarceration,’ which will show how an object can tell a unique story about this time in history,” said Ukai, who is a Berkeley JACL board member.

Hirahara, a member of the Greater Los Angeles JACL, will be making her second appearance on the show. She will share her perspective on writing the Smithsonian article for the Pacific Citizen, and she will talk about her upcoming presentation at the FDR Presidential Library in Hyde Park, N.Y., in the fall.

“Asian Pacific America With Robert Handa” is a weekly half-hour show covering Asian news, events, community accomplishments and youth perspectives.

Currently, it is the only running Asian cultural affairs show on network television in the greater San Francisco Bay Area. It airs Sundays at 5:30 a.m. on NBC Bay Area, channel 11 or cable channel 3, and at 6 p.m. on COZI TV, channel 18.

HISTORIC JAPANESE PHOTOGRAPH COLLECTION PRESENTED TO CALIFORNIA STATE

COLOMA, CALIF. — Descendants of a California pioneer family presented a collection of historic photographs from one of the earliest Japanese immigrant settlements in the state during a special ceremony held at Marshall Gold Discovery State Historic Park in Coloma, Calif., on June 9.

The presentation was made by the descendants of Francis Veerkamp, a German pioneer in El Dorado County who befriended members of the Wakamatsu Tea and Silk Colony in the 19th century.

At Hiyama, a representative of the Japanese consulate’s office, and Consul Ryosuke Kamono also attended the ceremony, along with Park Superintendent Barry Smith, Merv de Haas, who explained how the photos were given to the family, and Martha de Haas, who donated the photos on behalf of the family.

The collection of historic photographs is the second gift donated to the state by the descendants of the Veerkamp family. Park Superintendent Smith is extremely thrilled that the family has entrusted the State of California with these precious photographs.

“California State Parks is honored to be receiving the original Wakamatsu photographs from the Veerkamp family archive,” Smith said. “These photographs are a prime example that no matter where you come in the world, you can find your relevance in early California history. These timeless pictures are guaranteed to enrich the people of California for generations to come.”

The Wakamatsu Colony was formed in 1869 by a group of political refugees, who left Japan to escape civil unrest and settled in Gold Hill, near Coloma. The colonists brought with them mulberry trees, silk worm cocoons, tea plant and bamboo shoots in hopes of establishing an agricultural settlement. They also brought cooking utensils, sword, and a banner bearing the crest of the Wakamatsu clan.

The Wakamatsu Tea and Silk Farm Colony struggled to survive for several years, as it was plagued by an insufficient water supply, lack of adequate funding, a labor dispute and other economic problems. Only a handful of colonists stayed in the Gold Hill area, thanks to the goodwill and friendship of the Veerkamp family, who had purchased the Wakamatsu Colony property.

The 11 donated photographs, all taken by photographer George H. Gilbert, whose work reflects the days of the Gold Rush around Placerville, Calif., will be carefully preserved and eventually taken to McClellan Field and placed into storage. They could be put on display in the future for special events, but their ultimate use has not been determined given their extremely delicate condition.

The longevity of the Wakamatsu Colony was due, in part, to the goodwill of the Veerkamp family.
REGISTRATION NOW OPEN FOR THE SIXTH ANNUAL HEART MOUNTAIN PILGRIMAGE

POWELL, WYO. — Each year, hundreds of visitors make a “pilgrimage” to the Heart Mountain National Historic Site, where 14,000 people of Japanese Ancestry were unjustly incarcerated during World War II. The journey is taken by former incarcerees, their descendants, friends and members of the public who seek to understand this dark and poignant history and its impact on us today.

The 2017 Heart Mountain Pilgrimage will take place from July 26-28. The event will feature a keynote address by WWII U.S. Sen. Alan K. Simpson (ret.) and presentations by World War II veterans, film and video producers, poets, historians, and educational leaders.

The pilgrimage will begin in Cody, Wyo., on July 28, featuring educational sessions and a multigenerational discussion, followed by an evening banquet and silent auction at the Holiday Inn. The night will wrap up with a dessert reception.

Burroughs’ keynote address will be the centerpiece of the events scheduled for July 29. The U.S. Sen. Alan K. Simpson (ret.) is also scheduled to speak.

Other programming on July 29 will include the premiere of “Fascism,” a new documentary by David Ono and Jeff MacGrady, the award-winning filmmakers of “The Legacy of Heart Mountain.”

The pilgrimage will feature three special exhibitions showcasing artwork from Roger Shimomura as well as photographs by Stan Honda, Yoshio Okamoto and Amed Adams.

Registration for the Sixth Annual Heart Mountain Pilgrimage is now open to the public. The cost for participation in all the events, including the dinner banquet, dessert reception, opening ceremony, special presentations and exhibitions is $165 for nonmembers and $130 for members. Children ages 6-11 are only $50 and children under 5 are free.

Attendees can register online at www.heartmountain.org/pilgrimage or by calling (307) 784-8000.

SPOKEN WORD/VIDEO WORKSHOP OPPORTUNITY AT THE 2017 HEART MOUNTAIN PILGRIMAGE

POWELL, WYO. — The Heart Mountain Interpretive Center is offering a rare opportunity for students and recent graduates to work with professional writers and filmmakers at the 2017 Heart Mountain Pilgrimage. Participants will have the chance to compose their own spoken word poems with National Poetry Slam Champion G Yamazawa and transform their work into short videos with Emmy Award-winning producers David Ono and Jeff Maddyre.

This unique Spoken Word/Video Workshop welcomes anyone interested in WWII Japanese American incarceration history who enjoys writing, performing or storytelling. The multimedia workshop will take place from July 26-28.

Registrants will be given the option to participate in both the spoken word and video workshops or focus on the spoken word workshop alone.

Students will also have the opportunity to perform their work during a cultural and entertainment session on July 29, after which the video will be broadcast across social media.

“Our instructors are nationally acclaimed artists and storytellers,” said Heart Mountain Wyoming Foundation Chair Shirley Ann Higuchi in describing this special opportunity. “We’re excited that they are using their talents to show others how to tell their own stories about this important period in our nation’s history and keep the memories of the incarceration alive through the arts.”

Following the workshop, the pilgrimage will begin in Cody, Wyo. on July 28.

Registration for the workshop is open until June 23. The combined Spoken Word/Video portion is $150, and the Spoken Word portion alone is $50.

Register at shopheartmountain.org/workshop. For more information, visit heartmountain.org/tellyourstory.

Summer is here, and it’s only a matter of days before the 48th annual JACL National Convention in Washington, D.C. Traveling can be stressful, but with proper planning and research, you can eliminate a lot of the stress and focus on family fun.

In fact, I hope you will consider a multigenerational trip to this year’s National Convention to experience all that D.C. has to offer. Of special note are two booster events: a guided tour of the “Righting a Wrong: Japanese Americans and World War II” Smithsonian exhibit and a docent-led tour of the Japanese American National Memorial to Patriotism on July 9.

According to a U.S. Travel Assn. study, while nearly half of adults feel that family vacations are worthwhile because they can bring generations together — children love traveling with their grandparents on family vacations. Children who did so reported that they spent quality time with their grandparents, felt closer to their grandparents and enjoyed remembering stories about what they did with their grandparents after they returned home.

AARP research shows that the biggest benefits of a multigenerational trip is bringing the family together (83 percent), traveling with their grandparents on family vacations. Half of adults feel that family vacations are worthwhile (50 percent). The activities enjoyed most on these trips include spending time with the grandkids (50 percent). The activities enjoyed most on these trips include spending family time together (72 percent), dining out (49 percent) and relaxing by the pool/beach (41 percent).

A recent survey of American travelers shows that 93 percent feel happier after a vacation, 77 percent believe their health improves and roughly 80 percent believe that vacations and vacation activities result in greater productivity, energy and focus.

Our survey found that Boomers say that they smile and laugh more (68 percent), learn more new things (63 percent) and spend more time with friends and family (61 percent) when on vacation.

We also know that travel is how many Boomers celebrate milestone birthdays, such as turning 50. In social media posts about celebrating their 50th birthday, approximately one-tenth mentioned travel in their plans.

AARP research saw that of those 43 percent who took a trip to celebrate a milestone, anniversaries (49 percent) and birthdays (45 percent) were the most popular events celebrated.

If you’re ready to start planning, consider AARP Travel at travel.aarp.org. In AARP Travel’s Articles and Tips, there’s lots of helpful information like safety tips for solo travelers, tips for successful college campus visits, tips on when and how to buy health insurance for your trip and tips for travelers with mobility challenges.

Here’s what else you’ll find:

Trip Finder: Need a suggestion for your next vacation or a quick getaway? Tell us your interests, and we’ll suggest exciting new destinations. Trip Finder is a fun interactive tool that makes discovering new destinations an adventure in itself. Do you prefer a beach, a sophisticated city or spectacular outdoor vistas? Are you a foodie, a museum buff or a golf nut? Whatever you like to do, Trip Finder will match it up with an exciting place to go. You may be surprised — and delighted — at the results.

Destination Guides: Once you’ve decided on a place to go, AARP Travel’s Destination Guides help you experience the local flavor. The guides include information furnished by Fodor’s on hundreds of domestic and international locations. Click on the destination icons to see suggestions for points of interest and must-see attractions, as well as at-a-glance destination information such as average temperature, lowest prices for airfare and hotel and special AARP member offers available by destination.

Map Explorer: Embedded in every Destination Guide is a Map Explorer feature that lets you zoom to street level and view AARP recommendations, hotels, eateries and attractions. Click anywhere to see details, including reviews. If an AARP discount appears in your search result, the location will be identified in red.

Travel Booking and Access to Member Discounts: Once you’ve settled on where you want to go, at any point, you can book flights, hotels, cruises and car rentals through AARP relationships with Expedia, Liberty Travel or through links with other providers. In addition to finding member discounts, you’ll also have access to user reviews of hotels, restaurants and attractions.

Guess what? You just turned your travel idea into a real possibility! Useful travel tools that are tons of fun — that’s AARP Travel at travel.aarp.org.

I hope to see you at next month’s convention, and consider tacking on a few extra days to see all the sites in Washington, D.C., as well as bring the extended family for a memorable multigenerational vacation.
